Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage containing a Power of Sale, by reason of which default said Power of Sale has become operative, and the Assignee of the Mortgagee hereinafter named is authorized to declare the whole sum due, which mortgage was executed by Hans Stenerud and Nora Stenerud, his wife, Mortgagors, to Deposit Bank of Winona, Winona, Minnesota, Mortgagee, dated June 22nd, 1920, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota on the 25th day of June, A. D. 1920, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 92 of Mortgages, on page 279.

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Deposit Bank of Winona, Winona, Minnesota, Mortgagee, to Frank Jilk, by written assignment, dated June 28th, 1920, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 17th day of September, A. D. 1924, at 10 o'clock A. M., in Book 110 of Mortgages, on page 325,

And whereas, the said Frank Jilk, the assignee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms of said mortgage and the Power of Sale therein contained; and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of Fifteen Hundred Dollars ($1500.00), with accumulated interest from the 22nd day of June, 1921, at the rate of six per cent per annum; and whereas, the said Power of Sale has become operative and no action or proceedings having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof,

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz:

Lots Seven (7) and Eight (8), of Section Two (2), Lot Four (4), and the North Half of the Southwest Quarter (N½SW¼) of Section One (1), in Township One Hundred Fifty-Six (156) North, of Range Forty-two (42) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota.

Which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the front door of the County Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 11th day of November, 1924, at 10:30 o'clock A. M. of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the amount then due on said mortgage and interest, together with the costs and disbursements of such sale and Fifty Dollars attorney's fees stipulated, as attorney's fees in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

Dated September 23, 1924.

Mrs. John Hagberg was called to Crookston last week Thursday by the sickness of their daughter, Verna who had an attack of acute appendicitis and was operated upon the same afternoon. At last reports she was getting along as well as could be expected, but was not out of danger.

Later: Mr. Hagberg was called to Crookston Wednesday night on account of the condition of his daughter who was not so well.

Despite the rainy cold weathet, a large crowd was in Friday night to attend the Commercial Club Harvest Smoker, which was a decided success in every way, the entire program being carried out as advertised. Several were present from Thief River Falls who highly complimented the Club for their public spirit and hard work in furnishing free entertainment for the people of Holt and vicinity.

Narrow Escapes

Monday morning there was a heavy fog and the smoke from the peat fields, which the farmers are burning off in the Mud Lake district, got mixed with the fog and it became so dense that a person could barely see a rod or two, while the fog was at its worst.

There were two narrow escapes, during the forenoon, from what might have been fatal accidents.

A. K. Czyrson, cashier of the People's State Bank at Greenbush, ran his auto into the rear of patrolman Gilbert Johnson's road machine and smashed things up considerably. Mr. Johnson jumped just in time to save himself. The force of the blow broke the breeching of the harness, broke the neckyoke, damaged the machine, hurt one of the horses and caused them to run away. The axle and fender of the auto were bent and twisted, it was otherwise damaged. It was a very narrow escape for Mr. Johnson from a terrible injury or death.

The cars of Olaf Hagen and Tinus Nybo collided Monday forenoon during the fog, but as both were driving very slowly, hardly any damage was done. There were several in the former car and a little girl was thrown out but none were hurt.

These two accidents show the difference between careful driving and speeding.

Valuable Hints to Patrons
Delivering Cream to our Creamery

Pasteurization is very important, yet to have it done in an inefficient way is worse than not at all. In view of the fact we ask the cooperation and urge upon all patrons to try and do their share to help us. First— You must try and bring a 1st grade cream and have same delivered in the forenoon if possible. Second— Help us to get our average test 30 per cent or better. Sweet cream can be pasteurized more efficiently than sour, and high testing cream will save you more money for the reason that with a low testing cream it is impossible to churn it without considerable butterfat being drained out with the buttermilk.

"I—I—" Mrs. Archman's eyes widened and her lips quivered. "Oh! What shall I say?" she cried. "You don't know—you don't understand. I've got to tell you," she went on desperately. "Nellie isn't my own daughter, though I love her as if she were. She—she—Nellie! Hasn't your father told you anything?"

Nellie's lips were white. "My father?" she echoed. "Who is my father?"

"I can't tell you. Henry never told me. It wasn't his secret. But I suspect—I suspect—"

"I do, too." Nellie nodded slowly. "I've suspected for some time. Father said something. Mr. Dorth said more. And Captain Strindberg—but that's got nothing to do with Jim." She stretched out her hand to the young man. "We'll let it go for the present, but I'm going to marry Jim. Come on. I want to see the scene of the fight."

Van Kull shook his shoulders as if tossing off some heavy load. "Come along, then," he said. "But prepare yourself. I guess some of the mutineers are pretty badly wounded. The sight won't be a very pretty one."

Every one of the women caught her breath. "Oh! How wicked of me!" gasped Nellie. "I—I didn't realize that men were dying out there. We must try to help."

The debris of the fight was being rapidly cleared away. Half a dozen dead were laid out on the banks, but nearly all the prisoners, both those who were wounded and those who were not, had been put into the boats under guard, ready to be sent out to the destroyer.

Only Price remained on shore, watched by two sentinels. Clearly he was being reserved for some particular fate. But he met Nellie's eyes undauntedly as the party passed near him. "Well! You beat me," he gritted. "They're going to string me up out of hand, I reckon."

Nellie stepped back uncertainly. "I'm—I'm sorry," she said faintly.

"You ain't got any cause to be sorry," returned the man grimly. "I was going to do for you, all right, and for all the rest of your folks, too. And I'd ha' done it if it hadn't been for these Danes. D—n 'em! What on earth brings a Danish destroyer over here, anyway? I wish I could get some more of 'em before I croak." His eye followed Strindberg's form maliciously, as the latter passed to and fro directing the movements of his men.

"Say, lady," he went on. "I don't bear you no malice. I don't bear none of your crowd no malice. It's only those crazy Danes, butting in where they ain't got no business. I don't bear you no malice and I'll tell you something. That there woman's playing dirt on you." He gestured toward Miss Denslow. "I reckon she's the one that did that signaling. Anyway, she's disguised, and—"

For a moment the man glared at Miss Denslow; then his hand shot out and caught at her white hair. The guards caught at him, but they were too late. The hair came away, exposing beneath it a pile of closely bound chestnut locks that crowned a face that had suddenly become twenty years younger.

As Miss Denslow shrank back with a cry, drowned in a chorus of exclamations, Price burst out into a cackling laugh. "I thought so," he cried. "You're Edith Grant."

"No, she isn't." Young Archman sprang to the girl's side. "She's Edith Archman."

"Well, I'll be hanged!" The exclamation came from Van Kull, who was staring at the girl in amazement. "I thought you looked familiar, but I never saw you clearly since—"

Nellie broke in. "Yes! I remember!" she exclaimed. "You were at Miss Grant's cottage that night. You knew her—"

"Knew her? Of course, I knew her! She's my sister, Edith Van Kull. She wanted to be an actress, and father wouldn't have it and so she went ahead on her own. Well, I guess that's over now. Congratulate you, brother-in-law." He held out his hand to Harry Archman.

Lord George stepped forward. "May I also offer good wishes?" he asked. Then, as Edith took his hand, he turned to the others. "I had the pleasure of seeing Miss Grant—er—Mrs. Archman—on the stage once," he said. "I recognized her on the El Rio and I didn't quite understand, don't you know."

Mrs. Archman had stood, bewildered for a moment, but as Edith turned toward her with trembling lips she suddenly reached out her arms. "There! There! Dear!" she cried. "It's all right. It doesn't matter who you are or what you are. You've been the dearest girl in the world to me on this trip. I'm glad that Harry has got you!"

"And I am, too!" Bess held out her hand. "But I hope you're not going to stop being my governess. Of course, we haven't really begun lessons yet, but—" She broke off with a shriek.

Captain Strindberg had come up behind Lord George. Just as he reached the party, Price, who was still waiting under guard a few feet away, snatched a pistol from the belt of one of his watchers and fired point-blank at Strindberg. "Now I've got you, you d—n butter-in!" he yelled.

As he pulled the trigger the other guard struck at him and the bullet went wild.

But it did not miss altogether. Lord George whirled half around and staggered back, clapping his hand to his left arm.

Before he could fall, Bess caught him. "He's killed! Oh! My G—d! He's killed," she shrieked. Her tones told a story all their own.

Lord George read it. Catlike he caught his footing. "Not a blooming bit of it, Bess," he said. "The beggar only got me through the arm. What?" For half a second he hesitated, then before them all, he kissed her squarely on the lips.

As he did so Archman ran up. "Hey! What's this?" he cried. "What's all this mean?"

Bess snatched at him. "Don't swear, pops!" she counseled innocently. "Save your cuss words. You've got worse shocks than this coming." She glanced at Edith and then at Nellie. "However, we won't talk about that now. Just shake hands with Lord George and—"

But Strindberg broke in. While the others talked, he had been acting. Crimson with rage he had sprung toward the guards, who, too late, had fallen upon Price like thunderbolts. "Fools! Dolts! Blockheads!" he cried. Then he spun round on his lieutenant, who came running up. "Take that man out of sight and hang him to the nearest tree!" he ordered.

The lieutenant saluted, gave a brisk order, and the men closed in around Price and marched him away up the slope of the ravine. Then the captain broke in on Bess' words. "Mr. Archman," he ordered sharply, "be good enough to lead me to his highness!"

For perhaps ten minutes Archman's boat, with its lantern gleaming at the bow, pushed on through the darkness, following the convolutions of the stream. At last a gleam of daylight appeared ahead, evidently shining in through some opening in the rocks. Close to it Archman's boat stopped and its pasengers clambered out.

"This is as far as the boats can go at this stage of the tide, captain," he explained, as the latter's boat came up. "At high tide we can row through, but at present the channel beyond the opening is practically dry and we have to walk. If you will follow—"

Strindberg bowed. "Lead on," he said.

The distance to be traversed was not great, and luckily so, for to unaccustomed adventurers the surroundings were terrifying. Geyserlike bursts of steam puffed up again and again in their faces; the crust on which they walked was hot to their feet, and almost continual tremors ran through the earth. When at last they pushed through the final curtain of mist and came out close to a house, there was not one of the party but drew a long breath of relief, even though they all knew that the crater had long been occupied by men and must be perfectly safe.

In front of the building Archman halted. "Friends all," he said. "Captain Strindberg! The time has come to lift a curtain that fell more than twenty years ago, when one whose name I will not mention, even now, quit his great place in the world to marry the woman of his choice. He sailed away with her to conceal himself so that he might live in democratic freedom from the restrictions that hedge about a court. Here he came and here he has lived since, and here his wife is buried.

"He did not live idly. He had already won a reputation for chemical research, and here he broadened and expanded his knowledge. He called to his aid the heat and gases that alone survived of the mighty forces that once filled this place. Many inventions he made and marketed through me, his servant. Many secrets of nature he discovered, among others the secret of the diamond. He harnessed the volcano and bent it to his will.

"One lot of diamonds he made and sent to me by the hands of his servant, Morbach. Most of you know how Morbach was robbed and murdered. I do not know whether the criminal has been discovered—"

"Not the murderer, father." It was Nellie who interrupted. "But the man, Henry Harrison, who picked Mr. Morbach up after the auto accident, has confesed that he came back to Miss Grant's cottage in disguise and got the map and the diamonds from Mr. Morbach. Later he shipped on board the El Rio under the name of Price and led the mutiny."

"Humph! That explains much! I will say here that his highness has made no more diamonds and will make no more. The secret is lost. And now perhaps Captain Strindberg will explain why he seeks his highness—why he has sought him so desperately that he or his friends corrupted my secretary and bribed him to play traitor—"

"Akin?" The exclamation came from all.

"Yes! Akin was the traitor. I suspected him before I left New York, but I thought that once I had gotten away he would be harmless. But Captain Bunker and I are now satisfied that it was he who signaled to the pursuing ship and"—Archman broke off—"I will ask Captain Strindberg to remove him from the El Rio. He turned to the officer. "Captain," he finished, "perhaps you will explain."

The captain shrugged his shoulders. "His highness is needed in Denmark," he said. "Our secret service knew he would be needed sooner or later, and when he disappeared we tried to find him. Little by little we picked up the trail. We learned of Archman and of Morbach and of the existence of children." His eyes wandered to Nellie. "And now we have found him. In the search we have had to do things that we regret; but one cannot be squeamish when kingdoms—even small ones—are at stake. Success excuses all!" He shrugged his shoulders. "Enough!" he snapped. "Lead me to his highness."

Archman bowed. "Come!" he said, and turned toward the house.

Side by side the two mounted the stairs and entered the door. Behind them came the rest of the civilians. The sailors, under the command of the lieutenant, remained outside.

Archman threw open the door of the room to the right of the hall and ushered in his companions. He took off his hat as he entered; and the others, after a gasp of comprehension, did likewise.

In the middle of the room, on two trestles, surrounded by flaring tapers, rested a coffin draped in black, whose open glass front revealed the figure of a huge man whose waxen features bore, even in death, an ineffaceable air of majesty and mastery. Archman looked at him reverently. "This is his highness," he said.

The officer blinked. "I recognize him," he said, after an instant. "He is not very greatly changed since I knew him."

"I, too!" Lord George stepped forward. "I knew his highness years ago. That was why I was selected by my government to follow a clew associated with Mr. Archman and try to find him. I recognize him. He was a real statesman—one who gave promise of being a powerful figure in Europe, captain. Naturally my government, like many others, was interested in his strange disappearance. There have been rumors of a great war, you know."

Strindberg bowed. "I thank you, Lord Caruthers," he said. "His highness' death will be a great blow to Denmark. And his sons and daughters? What of them?" he looked at Archman.

"He leaves no sons!" Archman spoke deliberately.

"Perhaps it is as well. The marriage of his highness was morganatic and a son might complicate matters. But a daughter would be different." The captain's eyes wandered to Nellie, who stood hand in hand with Van Kull. "His majesty instructs me to say that his feelings toward any daughter are of the kindest. He offers her a title, great wealth, and a noble husband—everything that the customs of our country permit." The captain turned to Archman. "You can, of course, furnish proofs as to her identity?" he questioned.

"Yes!" Archman rose from a safe into which he had been delving and came forward. In his hands he held a sheaf of folded papers. "Yes!" he repeated. "The proofs are all here and are in due order. His highness meant to give them to his daughter yesterday. Unfortunately he decided to wait till today, hoping to be stronger. But last evening he died. I was with him when I received the news of the arrival of the El Rio. That was why I delayed. But the proofs are indubitable. I hand them to her who is more concerned."

With a sudden gesture he placed the papers in Nellie's hands. "Take them, my dear!" he said, his voice breaking.

Van Kull dropped the girl's hand and stepped back. His face was very white.

Nellie glanced at him. Then her eyes circled the room, and she shrank back slightly as she met the eyes centered upon her. Then with a quick indrawing of breath she spoke.

"Captain Strindberg," she said clearly, "let me understand. Would the daughter of his highness have to give up her Americanism, her home, her lover, her all?"

The captain bowed. "Madame," he said, "it would be almost impossible for her to avoid doing so."

Nellie nodded. "And in return she would get—what? An introduction to a court of strangers, a sum of money, a husband picked out for her by someone else? I'm sorry, but the price is too high!" With a sudden movement she thrust the papers into the flame of one of the tall tapers that burned at the dead man's head.

As they flamed up Strindberg made a sudden movement to snatch them. Then, as abruptly, he desisted and stood still while the papers burned.

With fitting ceremony, they buried the dead statesman that afternoon.

In the evening, when they were all gathered together, Nellie again addressed the Danish officer.

"I understand how seriously you, who love your country, Captain Strindberg, take this matter. I have a natural affection for your country—the country of my poor dead father. But—can't you see? Your proofs and summons come a generation too late! I'm an American — a Yank clear through and proud of it. And so is Henry Archman, though he loved and respected his old friend, my father."

"Surest thing you know!" roared Archman. "You're all right, Strindberg, but the girl's her own boss! Captain Bunker, we sail for New York tomorrow morning!"

[THE END]

Every Man's Duty

Every man should strive to be entitled to a good opinion of himself, and having gained it should strive to keep it to himself.—Boston Transcript.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Arlington—The free barbecue festival drew about 2,500 people from the surrounding country and towns.

Owatonna—More than 300 business men made the second "acquaintanceship" tour of the Owatonna Chamber of Commerce to the Hope village.

St. Peter—Gustavus Adolphus College of this city opened its 63d year with a total enrollment in all departments or more than 400.

Windom—The R. E. Jones Company of Wabasha, Minn., has purchased the St. John's Elevator Company property at Windom, Slayton and Wilder.

Hibbing—After killing a big elk that had "gone bad" in the zoo, the park board placed the 400 pound carcass on ice and is using the meat to feed the other animals.

Moorhead—A reward of $250 has been offered by the city of Moorhead for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the murderer of Michael Hansmann.

Faribault—Miss Amy Lowey, principal of St. Mary's hall, which was burned down recently, has announced that the opening of school has been postponed.

Crosby—Five additional bodies were recovered from the Milford mine, in which 41 lives were lost last February in a cavein, bringing the total number of bodies found to 35.

Rochester—Mrs. Martin Lee of Austin was probably fatally injured when she leaped from a Rochester-Winona bus after the brakes failed to work and the machine started backing down a steep hill.

Minneapolis—Alabama and Maryland marketing experts began a study of Minnesota's co-operative marketing systems, and may recommend adoption of the Minnesota system in their own states.

Fairmont—A grocery store featured the giving away of a carload of watermelons which had cost $480 laid down here. Within five hours 1,000 of the melons had been carried away by patrons.

Sleepy Eye—The annual meetings of the Southwestern Association of Congregational Churches of Minnesota, will be conducted at the Union Congregational Church in Sleepy Eye, October 7 and 8.

Hibbing—Oliver Iron Mining Company officials announced that the working forces at the Glenn mine, midway between Hibbing and Chisholm have increased from two to three shifts.

Worthington—Between 1,500 and 2,000 persons attended the funeral services of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hulbert and Mrs. Eva See, the three persons killed in an automobile accident near here.

St. Paul—Country bankers of the heavy potato growing sections of Minnesota, particularly in the Red River valley, are solidly behind the marketing program of the Minnesota Potato Growers' exchange, according to S. G. Rubinow, general manager.

Hibbing—Total registration of tourists at the summer camp up to September 15 was 5,709 people, who came in 1,600 cars. As the camp is not yet closed for the season, this number will be appreciably increased, the officials say.

Anoka—For the first time in the history of Minnesota a woman was appointed to fill a judicial office. Mrs. Orrie S. Wyman of Anoka was appointed by Governor J. A. O. Preus to succeed her husband, George N. Wyman, as municipal judge of Anoka.

St. Cloud — With the notification of the first quota of his personnel, Dr. Hans Hanson, medical officer in charge of the new U. S. Veterans hospital here, has announced that the opening of the institution will be early in October.

New Ulm—Plans are now under way for the dedication of the new Methodist Episcopal church here in November, probably at Thanksgiving time. The edifice, costing $65,000 is an imposing structure of dark tinted brick with a red tile roof.

Minneapolis—Representatives of 30 daily newspapers in Minnesota, western Wisconsin, North Dakota, South Dakota and Iowa met in the Hotel Radisson for the semi-annual convention of the Northwest Daily Press association.

Rochester—Mr. and Mrs. John J. Aupperle of Stwartville have both been called for jury service at the October term of court here. Mr. Aupperle will serve on the grand jury, while his wife will do service as a petit juror.

Stillwater—After abandoning her first request for a divorce to go to the aid of her husband while he was on trial for the murder in August, of Emil Engstrom, police taxicab inspector, Mrs. Grace Stauffer, wife of William Stauffer, taxicab driver and gunman, asked for a second time for a divorce.

Fairmont—Byron True, an old resident and leading farmer of Martin county, lost a new barn and an Ayrshire bull valued at $500, by fire, when the barn was struck by lightning. The loss is estimated at $5,000.

St. Cloud—Petitions bearing hundreds of names directed to Governor Small and requesting clemency for Bernard Grant, who was under sentence to hang until the Governor granted a ninety day reprieve, are reaching Grant's attorney. One bearing 650 signatures was from here, the first signature being that of Alvan Eastman, editor of The St. Cloud Journal.

Faribault — Meeting separately the members of the First and German M. E. churches of Faribault voted in favor of a merger into one congregation.

Moorhead—The annual meeting of the Northwest Central Education Association will be conducted in Moorhead October 9, 10 and 11.

Bemidji — Sawing operations for the season were completed at the Crookston Lumber company at Plant No. 1, several weeks earlier than usual, on account of the large supply of lumber now on hand in the yards.

Alborn—A hail storm that beat all they had ever experienced in this section of the country, was passed thru Alborn by tourists of Alborn who had been camping at Cook and have just returned.

Welcome—E. W. Halkney, who raises cattle and hogs on a large scale on his farm near here, this week shipped a trainload of cattle and hogs to Chicago. The shipment was said to be one of the largest ever made from Martin county.

Slayton—Plans are now being made for the seining of a number of the lakes in this section of the state for the purpose of making away with the buffalo, carp, suckers and other rough fish.

Albert Lea — Realizing the need of physical development as well as mental development, the school board here has made physical training compulsory in the high school for boys and voluntary for girls for the first time.

Lake City—The firm of H. A. Young & Co. of this city celebrates its 61st birthday and for that entire time has been in business in Wabasha county and with the exception of about two year spent in Reads Landing has been in Lake City.

Shakopee — Justice Pierce Butler of the United States Supreme Court resigned as a member of the board of regents of the University of Minnesota, and Governor J. A. O. Preus appointed Julius A. Coller of Shakopee to fill the vacancy.

Redwood Falls—Four older boys' conferences with an enrollment of 1,000 delegates from 75 high schools of Minnesota have been planned. A conference for boys in the southwestern part of the state will be held at Redwood Falls November 21-23.

Faribault—Authority to proceed with preliminary plans for floating $56,000 worth of municipal bonds has been granted. Several projects will be covered in the bond issue. The largest is the purchase of additional fire equipment, costing approximately $26,000.

Magnolia—A nearly completed check of the loot obtained by bandits who rifled the safety deposit boxes in the vault of the Magnolia State Bank, indicates that the loss will be in the neighborhood of $1,200. Several pearls, valued at around $1,000, were included in the loot.

Rochester—Just one year to the day, after he was struck and injured by an automobile, and almost the same spot, Alston Twiss, 6 years old, was again hit by an automobile. He has a fractured skull and several body bruises, but physicians say he has an even chance for recovery.

St. Paul—Governor J. A. O. Preus closed the 1924 hunting season to the shooting of imported ringneck pheasants. Game laws hitherto provided that male ringneck pheasants could be taken from October 15 to 18, inclusive, in even numbered years, limiting the bag to three male birds in one day or in any one open season.

Duluth—Fire thought to have originated at the top of the elevator shaft at the Spaulding hotel here, did damage estimated, roughly, between $90,000 and $125,000 to the building and contents. The 185 guests aroused had time to clothe themselves and pack baggage before descending to the street.

Willmar—Company 1, 205th Infantry, Minnesota National Guard, which was stationed at Willmar, has been mustered out and the headquarters company which was stationed at Fairmont, has been designated as Company E. Willmar had no armory or drill ground and there was a lack of interest.

St. Cloud — Four of the larger granite producing firms in the St. Cloud district have been merged with a capital of $2,000,000. The firms included in the merger are: Campbell Northstar Granite Company, Great Northern Granite Company, Pioneer Granite Company and the Allied Sawing Company.

Detroit—G. J. Norby, a resident of this community since 1871, who died in a St. Paul hospital, was buried here. He served in public office nearly all of his life. He was a representative of this district in the Minnesota legislature in 1921 and 1922. He served as mayor of Detroit for two terms and was sheriff of Becker county for three terms.

Stillwater — Mrs. Grace Stauffer, wife of William Stauffer, convicted murderer of Emil Engstrom, police motorcab inspector, was granted a divorce. The divorce action was started before Stauffer killed Engstrom. Mrs. Stauffer, called back from Miles City to aid in the hunt for her husband, employed her attorney to defend her husband, dropping the divorce action for the time.

Stillwater—Prison walls failed to intimidate a bandit who, after a 20-mile ride in a taxicab from St. Paul, held up the driver at the gates of the penitentiary near Stillwater.

Duluth—Characterizing the veteran industrial employee as a bulwark of civilization in times of peace and heroes in times of war, W. A. McGonagle, president of the Duluth, Mesaba & Northern Railroad, addressing 600 veteran workers at Duluth's first industrial veterans' banquet here, declared it was because of this fact that they were being honored by their employers.

Weak and Miserable?

Are you dull, tired and achy—bothered with a bad back? Do you lack ambition, suffer headaches and dizziness—feel "all worn out"? Likely your kidneys are to blame. Lameness, sharp, stabbing pains, backache and annoying urinary disorders are all symptoms of weakened kidneys. Don't wait for more serious trouble. Get back your health and keep it! Use Doan's Pills, a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys. Thousands of folks tell their merit. Ask your neighbor!

A Minnesota Case

Mrs. A. Krinkie, 210 E. 7th St., Morris, Minn., says: "I was in a great deal of agony with sharp pains across my kidneys. The muscles over my kidneys were so sore and stiff I could hardly bend. My strength began to leave me. I had dizzy spells and splitting headaches. My kidneys acted irregularly. Doan's Pills rid me of the attack."

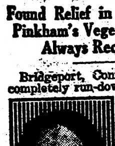
WOMAN WEAK DIZZY, FAINT

Found Relief in Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Always Recommends It



Bridgeport, Connecticut.—"I was completely run-down, had headaches, dizzy, faint feelings and other troubles women often have. As I had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before, my husband said to take it again. I have now taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine, the Liver Pills, and six boxes of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Tablets. I am feeling very good now and shall continue taking them for a while. I have been telling my cousin about the medicine and she wants to take it, too. I always recommend it."—Mrs. HENRY C. SMITH, R.F.D. No. 2, Box 6, Bridgeport, Conn.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a splendid medicine for such conditions. It has in many cases relieved those symptoms by removing the cause of them. Mrs. Smith's experience is but one of many.

In a recent country-wide canvass of purchasers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, over 121,000 replies were received, and 98 per cent. reported they were benefited by its use. For sale by druggists everywhere.

Motion Pictures Used to Save Texas Game

Motion pictures as educational factors are more and more recognized. New evidence of appreciation of their possibilities, says the Argonaut, is given by the game commission of Texas. Popularity of automobiles has increased the numbers of hunters and fishermen until only an awakening of state pride can save the deer, wild turkey, trout and black bass from extermination.

Two ardent sportsmen who are also cameramen were sent 10,000 miles through the big state in the last year to collect material for a picture depicting wild animal life, and now that copies of the film have been shown over the state, there has been started a persistent agitation for the preservation of Texas game life.

Other states are becoming interested, and the two sportsmen-cameramen will make a similar picture for the state of Arkansas.

Turkish Divorce

Custom in Turkey has made almost any trivial cause sufficient ground for a man to divorce his wife. It has made the Turk man the owner of the power to divorce. He may rid himself of his wife by merely saying before two witnesses, "I divorce you." Then, if he wishes, he may marry her again for a second time, divorce her by the same simple process, marry her a third time and divorce her. But before he marries her a fourth time she must have been married, if only for one day, to some other man and then divorced. If a husband chooses, he may indulge in a cubic divorce process by saying before two witnesses, "I divorce you with three divorces."—Beatrice Hill Ogilvie, in Current History Magazine.

Joke on Admiral

When the new swimming pool at the Naval academy was opened, Admiral Henry B. Wilson issued orders that women were not to be permitted to swim in it. The officers' wives and their friends were to use the old pool. But the word was passed about—and it reached the ears of the admiral—that a certain young woman had been in the pool, not once, but frequently. And the admiral started an investigation. It was quickly called off when he found the "young woman" in the pool was none other than Violet Ray—a means used to cleanse the water.

Island Springs Up

Warning beacons have been erected on a new island which sprung up recently in the sea of Azov, an arm of the Black sea, as a result of a maritime convulsion. YANKEE AIRMEN FINISH FLIGHT

27,534 Mile Flight Is Made In 351 Hours, 11 Minutes Flying Time

Seattle, Wash.—Six United States army aviators who completed a flight around the world with their arrival here Sunday from Eugene, Ore., Monday received the welcome which had been arranged by an appreciative citizenry.

"Elapsed time of the flight was 175 days; total mileage, start to finish, 27,534; actually in the air, 66; actual flying time, 351 hours, 11 minutes; average speed 76.66 miles an hour."

Lieutenant Lowell H. Smith, commander of the flight, officially reported completion of the journey to Major General Mason M. Patrick at Washington, D. C., by telephone Sunday night. He was informed by General Patrick, that future duties and movements of the six aviators will be announced.

At a public luncheon Monday the fliers and their mechanics made talks describing their world famous trip.

In addition to the luncheon, the aviators participated in the dedication of a monument at Sand Point commemorating man's first circumnavigation of the globe by air.

A telegram received from President Coolidge informed the men that the president intends, on the convening of congress, to "recommend that authority be granted to reward the squadron by promotion and other appropriate action in order that your distinguished services may have a practical recognition from your country."

Seattle's homage to the epoch-making aviators was among the best of any city along the route in the United States. Ten thousand persons witnessed the arrival of the three planes; 5,000 more cheered as they stepped off a private yacht at Madison park and transferred to automobile, and thousands of others sounded automobile horns and sent up lusty greetings as the aviators progressed through the automobile-lined streets to Volunteer park, where 50,000 persons listened to short talks from the men.

HOLMAN MAKES FAST FLIGHT

Flies From Minot to Dayton in 11 Hours, 28 Minutes.

Minneapolis.—A flying record of 11 hours and 28 minutes, from Minot, N. D., to Dayton, Ohio, with one stop en route was established Sunday by Charles Holman, pilot of the "Gold Medal" plane entered by the Aero club of Minneapolis in the "On to Dayton" event of the international air races, which began at Dayton Thursday.

The average speed for the trip, approximately 1,160 miles airline, was 102.84 miles an hour.

Leaving Minot at 4:15 a. m. Holman arrived at the Wold-Chamberlain twin city airport at 9 a. m., after having a fairly good wind behind him most of the way. Forty minutes were devoted to loading the plane with 70 gallons of gasoline and other supplies and at 9:40 a. m. he took off again and did not stop until he reached Dayton at 4:23 p. m. He had a good tail wind virtually the entire distance from Minneapolis to Dayton.

FIND WRECKAGE OF SHIP

Great Lakes Shipping Officials Convinced Clifton Sunk in Storm.

Cleveland, Ohio.—With the recovery of wreckage from the whaleback freighter Clifton and sighting of more, efforts are confined to the recovery of the bodies of 28 men, officers, and crew of the vessel. Search is centered on the Canadian shore, where it is believed the bodies, none of which have been recovered early Monday, will be carried.

Reports that wreckage had been found were received Sunday night by A. E. R. Schneider, manager of the Progress Steamship company, Cleveland, owners of the Clifton. The end of a pilot house and broken hatch covers, picked up about 70 miles from Goderich, on the Detour-Goderich course, by Captain Dalton Hudson of the steamer Glencairn on Saturday, were parts of the Clifton, Mr. Schneider said.

Aged Groom Kidnapped at Altar.

Reno, Nev.—Dragged, screaming from the church as he prepared to go to the altar for a wedding ceremony, Francis A. Robb, 84, wealthy Reno property owner, was whisked away in an automobile Sunday. Two sons, Ray and Edward Robb, are being sought. The elder Robb was to have been married to Mrs. Margaret Nicholsen, 60. The "best man," a clergyman, witnessed the alleged kidnapping, and passersby stood in amazement as the old man called vainly for help.

Mrs. Ferguson Wins First Step.

Austin, Tex.—Mrs. Miriam A. Ferguson Monday won the first step in the court fight to have her disqualified as Democratic nominee for governor of Texas. An injunction to keep her name off the ballot was refused in district court. The court held that Mrs. Ferguson is qualified in every way to hold the office and that the so-called common law disability against women in office does not apply. The The old common law principles were said by the judge to be obsolete in this country.

Fish Frozen in Ice

It is said that there are authenticated cases of fishes and frogs which have survived after having been incased in solid ice. This is because cold-blooded creatures such as fish and frogs have a very low standard of heat. Their body temperature is only slightly above that of the surrounding atmosphere. However, fishes and frogs frozen in ice would not usually survive.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage containing a Power of Sale, by reason of which default said Power of Sale has become operative and the Assignee of the Mortgagee hereinafter named is authorized to declare the whole sum due and he hereby does declare said sum due, which mortgage was executed by Frederick M. Olson, a single man, mortgagor, to J. D. Layton, mortgagee, dated May 21st, 1923, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 4th day of June, 1923, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 115 of Mortgages on page 493.

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said J. D. Layton, Mortgagee, to Clement Kamrowski, by written assignment dated October 23rd, 1923, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 25th day of October, 1923, at 11 o'clock A. M., in Book 115 of Mortgages on page 503.

And whereas, the said Clement Kamrowski, the assignee and holder of said mortgage, has elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the Power of Sale therein contained; and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Fifty-five Hundred ($5500.00) Dollars, with accumulated interest from the 21st day of May, 1923, at the rate of six and one-half per cent per annum; and whereas, the Power of Sale has become operative and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof,

Now, Therefore, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz:

The Northwest Quarter (NW¼) of Section Sixteen (16) in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North, of Range Forty (40) West, of the Fifth Principal Meridian, in Minnesota containing One Hundred sixty (160) acres, more or less, according to the United States Government Survey thereof.

Which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the front door of the County Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 28th day of October, at 10 o'clock A. M., of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the amount then due on said mortgage and interest and all delinquent taxes, if any, on said premises, together with the costs and disbursements of such sale and Seventy-five Dollars, as the statutory attorney's fees stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

CLEMENT KAMROWSKI,
Assignee of Mortgagee.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Notice is hereby given, that default has been made in the conditions of a mortgage executed by Ludwig Klinge, a single man, Mortgagor, to the Farm Loan Security Company of Thief River Falls, Minnesota, a Corporation, Mortgagee, dated July 3, 1920, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Marshall, Minnesota, on the 10th day of November, 1920, at 11 o'clock A. M., in Book 100 of Mortgages, on page 213.

That on the 20th day of November, 1920, said mortgage was assigned by the said Farm Loan Security Company of Thief River Falls, Minnesota, a Corporation, Mortgagee, to Albertus Hinrichs, and the Deed of Assignment recorded on July 13, 1922, at 8 o'clock A. M., in the Office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, in Book 110 of Mortgages, on page 50 thereof.

That thereafter, to-wit: on the 29th day of June, 1922, the said Albertus Hinrichs assigned said mortgage by assignment in writing dated on that day, and which Assignment was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 13th day of July, 1922, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 103 of Mortgages, on page 389 thereof.

That such default consists in the non-payment, when due, of the principal and interest which said mortgage was given to secure; that the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at this date, is the sum of One Thousand Seventy Dollars ($1070.00).

That the premises described in and covered by said mortgage are described as follows: The Northwest Quarter (NW¼) of Section Thirteen (13), Township One Hundred Fifty-five (155) North, of Range Forty-two (42) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian and situated in Marshall County, Minnesota.

That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, said mortgage will be foreclosed by the sale of said premises, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, by the Sheriff of Marshall County, Minnesota, at the West front door of the Marshall County Court House in the City of Warren, in Marshall County, Minnesota, on Monday, the 20th day of October, 1924, at 10 o'clock A. M., of that day, to satisfy the amount then due on said mortgage, together with the costs of such sale, and Fifty Dollars ($50.00), Attorney's fees, stipulated in said mortgage.

Dated September 2nd, 1924.

The Farmers creamery at Strandquist is closed and they want to sell their plant. This would never happened had the farmers signed the patronage contract. Now the cream stations have everything their own way in that little burg.

IMMENSENESS STAGGERING

Just as the caption, "The Greatest Show on Earth" was applied to this mammoth circus of Barnum and Bailey in years past, so today the title could well be applied to the James Cruze production, "The Covered Wagon" which will be shown for four days commencing October 13th in Middle River.

It has been said that every phase of human progress is marked each ten years by one, and only one, outstanding accomplishment, one supreme achievement. A decade ago the eyes of the United States were turned to that marvelous production by Griffith, "The Birth of a Nation" and today the eyes of every man, woman and child in the nation are centered upon, the wonder production, "The Covered Wagon," the one, and only one, outstanding accomplishment in the Motion picture world for this decade.

Just as "The Birth of a Nation" was of historical importance—the reconstruction period—so "Covered Wagon" is of equal, and to us of the Northwest possibly greater, importance—the growth and development of the great west—our pioneer days. And from a standpoint of actual magnitude, "The Covered Wagon" has far outstripped "The Birth of a Nation."

Some idea of the greatness of the undertaking may be obtained from the following figures of "props" and players: 3,000 Actors—1,000 Indians,—3,000 horres—300 covered wagons, a two mile train—600 oxen—500 buffalos—500 mules—filmed in four different states—The Baker Ranch (in Nevada) of 200,000 acres practically all used for filming. In actual cash cost of production this picture has far exceeded all previous records. Tremendous, indeed!

REPUBLICANS OPEN STATE CAMPAIGN

Candidate for Governor Outlines Party Platform In Keynote Speech.

THEODORE CHRISTIANSON
Republican Candidate for Governor

Madison, Minn., Sept. 19—Theodore Christianson, Republican candidate for governor, formally opened his campaign here tonight before an enthusiastic crowd that packed the Armory.

After discussing war and post-war conditions which resulted in a drop in the price of agricultural products while taxes remained high, Mr. Christianson said:

Is it any wonder that the farmers of Minnesota were confronted with one of the gravest crises in the history of agriculture?

Relief for Agriculture.

What steps did the government take to relieve the farmers' situation? What steps could it take?

I. It took action to reduce the interest burden of the farmers. Through a decision of the United States Supreme Court the validity of the Federal Land Bank Act was sustained, and the banks resumed operation. In Minnesota, a constitutional amendment which I sponsored, was adopted, authorizing the creation of a state credits system to supplement the activities of the Federal Land banks. The object of creating these governmental functions was not to give the farmer more credit, for much of the farmer's trouble arose from the fact that he had already used too much credit. The object was to reduce interest rates in order to lighten the burden of the farmer's indebtedness. And that object was accomplished, for immediately the interest rates on first farm mortgages dropped 1½ to 2 per cent. The saving from reduced interest rates alone, if applied every year on the principal, would in the course of twenty years discharge every farm mortgage in Minnesota.

Expenditures Reduced.

II. The government set itself to the task of relieving the people of the burden of excessive taxation. Much of that burden, to be sure, was fixed and could not be removed. Obligations had been created upon which interest must be paid. Salaries had been raised to meet increased living costs, and official salaries are rarely reduced. New instrumentalities of government had been created, often at the demand of the very groups that now criticize the government for increased expenditures. Public institutions had to be created or enlarged to repair the physical and moral wreckage of the war; and public improvements were made on a more lavish and expensive scale than before in response to an extravagant—and irrisistible—public opinion.

But despite these handicaps, which were almost insurmountable, progress has been made toward normalcy. In Minnesota, the legislature by refusing approximately $15,000,000 in requested appropriations, held the 1923 budget down to $40,000,000, at the same time appropriating nearly $5,000,000 more for state aid to schools than had ever been appropriated before. If this additional state aid had not been given, the 1923 appropriations would have been almost $2,000,000 below those of 1921. Thus it may be seen that there has been a reduction in the cost of conducting all of the state's activities during the present biennium of about $1,000,000 per year below that of the previous two-year period.

Favored Budget Plan.

The financial achievements of the national administration, during the same period, have been phenomenal. A budget system has been established and the judgment of an impartial and disinterested agency, not the importunities of the recipients of congressional appropriations, determines the amounts to be made available for departmental expenditures. The result has been a reduction of such expenditures from more than $5,500,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, to less than $3,500,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and a reduction of the national indebtedness during the same period by $2,750,000,000. This record demonstrates the efficiency of the budget system as an agency of tax reduction. I have long advocated the establishment of a budget system in Minnesota. At three different sessions of the legislature I have, in collaboration with the present Republican candidate for lieutenant governor, presented and secured the passage of a budget bill through the House of Representatives. If elected governor of Minnesota, I shall use the influence of the executive office to secure enactment by the legislature of an effective budget law.

Co-operative Marketing.

III. The Republican party has helped agriculture in Minnesota by enacting legislation to promote co-operative marketing. The first effective step in this direction was taken in 1919, when a co-operative marketing law was passed which not only recognized but specifically guaranteed to the farmers of this state the right to bargain collectively for the sale of their products. It is a source of satisfaction to have been a member of a legislative group that drafted and introduced this measure. No longer can farmers be put in jail for doing what men in the organized labor movement have been permitted to do for a generation. The Minnesota co-operative marketing law led to the enactment of similar legislation by the Federal Congress.

Not only has our legislature enacted laws that make it possible for farmers to co-operate, but it has created a Department of Agriculture charged specifically with the duty of assisting them to avail themselves of these laws.

Education.

The greatest safeguard of a state is an enlightened citizenship. Minnesota has recognized the obligation of education by making liberal contribution to the support of schools. Of the $40,000,000 appropriated by the 1923 legislature, $21,500,000 was for education. Appropriations for state aid to high, graded and rural schools increased from $3,500,000 in 1913 to $12,000,000 in 1923.

If the increase in state aid were deducted from the 1923 totals, the increase of appropriations for 1923 would be 66 per cent over the appropriations for 1913, an average increase of 6 per cent per year. The increase in school aid for the same period has been 243 per cent—more than 24 per cent per year.

Highways.

Minnesota's record in the building of roads is one of achievement. The 7,000 miles of Trunk highways have been improved and maintained with great efficiency, without the appropriation of a dollar from funds provided by the general taxpayer. Owners of motor vehicles have furnished the funds.

It is a source of gratification to the people of Minnesota that the administration of its great road fund has been at all times above suspicion. A great responsibility was placed in the hands of one man, and that responsibility was not misplaced. It is the hope of every good citizen that the highway department be kept out of politics in the future as it has been in the past, and that capacity for service and integrity of purpose be the sole consideration in the appointment of men to administer its functions. There can be differences of opinion as to policy. There can be no difference of opinion as to the need of character and capacity in those who are chosen to do the work of the state.

Conservation.

Minnesota is rich in her inheritance of natural resources. In fertile fields and iron mines she leads the civilized world. Large stands of virgin timber yet remain in the northeast section of the state, and our responsibility at the present time is for their future. If elected governor, I shall use every power of the office to conserve our public domain, and our wealth in minerals, timber, land and power. The state's iron must be made to yield its greatest revenue through the beneficiation of low-grade ore. Our timber must be conserved by solving our pressing problems of fire prevention, conservation of immature timber and reforestation.

Relief From Tax Burden.

Relief from the burden of excessive taxation presents the predominant issue of the campaign and the subject of most vital interest to the people of Minnesota. It is true that less than 10 per cent of the tax burden is imposed by the state government, but the state government owes the duty of setting an example to counties, cities, villages, townships and school districts. Wherever excessive and unnecessary local expenditures are made necessary by state laws, such laws should be replaced or amended.

One of the largest items of governmental expenditure is interest on bonded indebtedness. In Minnesota public indebtedness has increased 283 per cent in ten years and now aggregates $300,000,000. Practically all of this is indebtedness of counties, cities, villages, townships and school districts. In fact, the indebtedness of the state government, exclusive of rural credits bonds, is only about $15,000,000—of which twelve millions are soldier bonus certificates. Communities have voted bonds, often in utter disregard of the inevitable day of reckoning. Bond issue has been pyramided on bond issue, until the interest alone necessitates a large tax levy. Other states have had the same experience. In Iowa the percentage of increase in ten years has been 329, in Michigan 503. If the tendency of the last decade continues during the life of the present generation our posterity will face a burden that will present the alternative of confiscation or repudiation.

The remedy is to compel the generation that creates indebtedness to discharge it. Enact legislation that will make null and void bonds, issued for any purpose except refundment of existing obligations, which do not carry with them a definite tax levy running over the period of the bonds sufficient at the expiration of that period to discharge those bonds.

It is said that the total public indebtedness of the American people at the present time is $40,000,000,000, and the wealth of America has been estimated at $250,000,000,000. It appears, therefore, that our public indebtedness is 16 per cent of the national wealth.

We must set our faces resolutely against proposals that will necessitate large increases of bonded indebtedness. The so-called Farmer-Labor party and its candidates are committed to "public ownership of transportation, including stockyards, large abattoirs, grain elevators, terminal warehouses, of principal natural resources, such as coal, oil, natural gas, mineral deposits, large water powers and large commercial timber tracts." It is impossible even to estimate the result on public indebtedness of the adoption of this program in its entirety, for there are no satisfactory statistics available as to the physical value of the property used in all these industries. We can, however, estimate the result of the adoption of a relatively small part of the program—that part which contemplates government ownership of railroads.

If the government were to acquire the railroads, it would have to buy and pay for them, for we have a constitutional provision that private property cannot be taken over for public use without just compensation. That provision we dare not abrogate, because if the government could confiscate a railroad it could likewise confiscate farms, shops and homes.

What would it have to pay for the railroads? Admittedly it would not have to pay for "watered stock" or good will, but it would have to pay the actual value of all physical property used in transportation. What is that value? One valuation has been made. As a result of that valuation it was ascertained that the physical value of the railroad properties of this country in 1915 was $18,900,000,000. Since that time several billions of dollars have been added, and it has been estimated that the value today is $22,000,000,000. To be safe, let us put it at $20,000,000,000. That is 8 per cent of $250,000,000,000, the estimated national wealth. Bonds would have to be issued to provide the money, and these bonds would constitute a first lien on all the property in America, for the interest thereon would be collectible as taxes, and taxes take precedence over any mortgage or other lien. Your share, Minnesota farmer, if you own a $50,000 farm, would be $4,000. Would you willingly appear before a notary public to sign and acknowledge a $4,000 mortgage on your farm in order to furnish the money with which to make a doubtful experiment in public ownership of railroads? Would you give anybody a power of attorney to execute such a mortgage for you? You would not. But that is just what the candidates of the so-called Farmer-Labor party ask you to do when they ask you to vote for them.

And they are asking you, not only to give them such a power of attorney, but to consent to a doubling of the state tax on your farm. At the present time the state of Minnesota derives $8,500,000 a year from a tax on the gross earnings of railroad companies. If the railroads became government property, the state would lose that revenue, or it would be futile for the government to tax its own instrumentality. The revenue thus lost would have to be made up by an additional levy on all other property in the state. An additional one-mill levy would raise less than $2,000,000. In order to make up the $8,500,000 of lost revenue, there would have to be imposed on every farm and every other piece of property in Minnesota practically four mills in additional taxes. The average state tax rate during the past decade has been only a little over four mills. Therefore, Minnesota farmer, when the candidates of the so-called Farmer Labor party ask you to vote for them, they not only ask you to put a $4,000 mortgage on your farm but to consent to a doubling of the state tax-rate thereon, not only for the next year, or the next decade, but for all time to come.

And let it be noted, that however disastrous government ownership of railroads would be, it would be relatively harmless compared with the adoption of the entire public ownership program of the so-called Farmer Labor party.

It will undoubtedly be contended by advocates of the public ownership idea that the publicly-owned enterprises would return to the government sums adequate to compensate for loss of taxes and to pay the interest on bonds. There is no basis for such a contention if we may judge from the experience of the neighboring state of North Dakota in the operation of its flour mill. Not only has the mill failed to return its operating expenses; not only does it not pay any taxes on its property; but the taxpayers of the state are required to meet an interest charge of $1,000 per day on the bonds issued to build and equip it and to finance its business. Surely he would be an optimist who, with knowledge of the record of public ownership elsewhere, would expect publicly operated industrial enterprises to bring to the people anything but higher taxes, increased public indebtedness, impaired credit and industrial stagnation.

Instead of adopting policies which would increase the burdens of the people of our commonwealth, let us take steps to reduce those burdens. Let us make government simpler, not more complex.

Born and raised on a farm I share the aspirations of those who labor. My sympathies are not with the drones of society but with its workers, for I have always had to work myself. When I am in the executive chair, the farmers and workers of Minnesota will know they have a governor who understands them because he is one of them.

The Republican party enters this campaign with confidence, knowing that its record of achievement justifies faith in the sincerity of its present promises. It presents in Calvin Coolidge, its candidate for President, one who, entering the office of Chief Executive under conditions as trying as those that ever confronted any man, has won the confidence of his fellow citizens everywhere. For Vice-President it offers in Charles G. Dawes, not a second-rate figure, but a statesman who has achieved eminence, first, as director of the budget, and, then, as chairman of the commission which formulated the plan for the establishment of economic peace in Europe of which Chancellor Marx of Germany has said: "I like to compare the Dawes scheme with a great architectural blue-print for which the world owes the draughtsman its gratitude."

It would be immodest to appraise myself.—I leave that to the electorate of Minnesota. But of the rest of the ticket I can say that it is composed of men who are deserving of every confidence that the people of Minnesota can bestow. It is a ticket with merits and should insure a complete victory for the Republican party in November.

Farmers have a chance to prove whether or not they really believe in cooperative marketing of produce. How about the creamery patronage contract, the state potato growers exchange with nearly 13,000 members, and the district association of poultry and egg growers with nearly 1,000 members? These are all doing business for their members, who are also shareholders, and share alike in the profits. No farmer can afford to pass them by.

Valuable Hints to Patrons
Delivering Cream to our Creamery
Pasteurization is very important, yet to have it done in an inefficient way is worse than not at all. In view of the fact we ask the cooperation and urge upon all patrons to try and do their share to help us. First— You must try and bring a 1st grade cream and have same delivered in the forenoon if possible. Second— Help us to get our average test 30 per cent or better. Sweet cream can be pasteurized more efficiently than sour, and high testing cream will save you more money for the reason that with a low testing cream it is impossible to churn it without considerable butterfat being drained out with the buttermilk.

JAPAN, RUSSIA MAY TAKE HAND

Outside Influences Loom Large As Potent Factors In China's Situation

Shanghai. — Outside influence — the measure of participation Russia and Japan may take in China's civil war—is looming large as a potent factor in the factional fight for control of the central government of China as opposing armies continued battling on widely separated fronts.

Japanese citizens and military organizations are urging their government to interfere as an ally of General Chang Tso-Lin, the Manchurian leader, who is conducting an offensive against the Peking government. The Japanese assert that government is privileged to interfere because of special interests in Manchuria, according to reports received here. Russia is reported to have taken action already in favor of General Chang.

On the Manchurian-Chihlian border, the armies of General Chang continued to oppose those of the Peking government and were fighting their way south, towards Peking, against the stubborn resistance of Chihli troops.

Forces Resisted.

On the Shanghai front, separated from the Manchurian front by more than 1,000 miles on Peking controlled territory, General Lu Yuan-Hsiang, another opponent of the central government, who has maintained an independent administration in the vicinity of Shanghai as military governor of Chekang province, continued Monday to put up a successful resistance against the invading Kiangsu armies in the field west of here.

The Kiangsu forces are under control of the central government.

Since the first fighting was started August 27, neither side has gained a material advantage, according to observers. The gains made by the Kiangsu armies, invading the Shanghai district, have been offset by defeats of the Peking troops on the Manchurian-Chihlian border.

Japanese protests to their government against the policy of non-interference on Manchuria have been augmented by the activities of a former officer of the Japanese army, who arrived in Tokio from Mukden, principal city of Manchuria, to use his influence in urging the Nippon government to cast their influence with General Chang's cause.

FURNITURE MEN UNDER FIRE

Charges of Price Fixing and Questionable Practices Are Made.

Washington.—Fresh charges of price fixing and questionable practices by manufacturers of household furnishings, are made in a concluding report on the industry by the federal trade commission acting in response to a senate resolution.

"The outstanding features of the report," says an announcement by the commission, "are the control exercised by patent pools among the manufacturers of washing machines, the shutting out of new competition in the vacuum cleaner industry; the questionable competitive tactics of the leading manufacturers of aluminum cooking utensils, which is affiliated with the Aluminum Company of America. The monopolitic position of the latter company, which has apparently engaged in various practices forbidden by a judicial decree under the Sherman act; the dominating position of the Singer company in the sewing machine industry; the efforts of trade associations in the refrigerator and broom industries to enhance the prices of their products, and the competitive methods of retail dealers in kitchen utensils and domestic appliances."

OCT. 27 IS ROOSEVELT DAY

Nestos Urges Badlands Park Support to Honor Dakotan's Memory.

Bismarck, N. D.—Declaring that the life of Theodore Roosevelt furnishes an inspiration to all American youth, Governor R. A. Nestos has designated Monday, October 27, as "Roosevelt day," and urges its observance by thoughtful reflection upon the ideals for which the former president stood, and by helping to raise funds in the campaign to obtain the establishment of the Roosevelt Memorial National park in the Badlands.

Governor Nestos, in his proclamation, says that Roosevelt, in battling ill health and eventually gaining a strong physique and constitution while ranching in western North Dakota, has set an inspiring example to others who may suffer similar handicaps.

The governor indorses the park project and urges its support. He also points out that October 27 is Navy day, and further urges that all citizens thoughtfully consider the value of our navy in promoting peace, prosperity, and the welfare of America.

9,818 Indians in North Dakota.

Washington.—The country's Indian population increased 2,619 in the last year and now totals 346,962, it is shown in a tabulation made public by the Indian bureau. Oklahoma still leads the states with 119,989 Indians. Other states included: South Dakota, 23,962; Minnesota, 13,920; Montana, 12,953; Wisconsin, 11,236, and North Dakota, 9,818. The figures do not include some 60,000 Indians who have surrendered their tribal identity and are counted in the general population.

Laugh at Mustard Gas

Mustard gas and other deadly chemicals in quantities which would have killed human beings have been resisted by birds with very little apparent inconvenience. English sparrows and domestic pigeons were placed in tight compartments, so arranged that the observers could watch their actions. The gas was administered in varying quantities. Amounts that would have killed a soldier caused the specimens to evince little agitation, and they recovered when taken into fresh air. In all, six varieties of gas were tried but without the desired effect. The experiments emphasized the difficulties encountered in ridding the country of the English sparrow in particular.

Physical culture is rather imperative on the farm.

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE
Praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound
"A Blessing to Suffering Women," Writes One

Louisville, Illinois.—"I certainly thank you for the great benefit I have received from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I first learned about it from my step-mother who got so much help from it. Several years ago I took it for inward weakness and since then I have taken it during the Change of Life and it has been a great help to me. It certainly is a blessing to suffering women and I take pleasure in recommending it. My health has been better this summer than it has been for five years. I am now able to do all my work and have canned 340 quarts of fruit and vegetables this summer."—Mrs. KATE MCPEAK, Louisville, Illinois.

Wants Letter Used As Proof
Frankford, Pennsylvania.—"I am sure if women who suffer through the Change of Life as I have, with hot flashes, nervousness and other weaknesses, would give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial they would be benefited as I was. My nerves were so bad that every little noise made me jump, but now I am not bothered that way at all. My husband says he really hated to look at me I looked so miserable. I hope you will use this letter as proof of the help the Vegetable Compound is giving me."—Mrs. ABBIE HARVEY, 5701 Leonard St., Frankford, Pa.

Forced To Remain in Bed
Carlisle, Illinois.—"During the Change of Life I suffered with severe nervousness and with disturbances of the entire system. These continued probably two years before I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I could do none of my work and was not always able to be up. For ten days at a time I was forced to remain in bed with my hips propped higher than my head and the pains were terrible. The doctor helped some but each time I was forced to go over the same suffering. I had taken the Vegetable Compound in 1910 after my twins were born and it had helped me so I decided to try it again. I became better and gained in strength. I have taken it for about three years now but not steadily. I am able to do my housework but I avoid all heavy lifting and washing and ironing as I know I am not strong enough yet. I give the Vegetable Compound to my daughters and recommend it to my friends."—Mrs. LOUISA B. BRAND, 450 Fairfax Street, Carlyle, Illinois.

In a recent country-wide canvass of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, over 100,000 replies were received and 98 out of every 100 reported they had been benefited by its use. For sale by druggists everywhere.

Small Telescope Powerful

A telescope has been invented which, although only five inches long, will magnify four and a half times. Such large magnification, combined with a short focal length, has been achieved by improved lens grinding and perfect mounting, says the London Tit-Bits.

The border of prismatic color in most expensive fieldglasses has been avoided by a new combination of glasses and the arrangement of apertures. The glass contains a concave-convex flint objective lens with a double concave fline eyepiece.

Enumerating Them

"What a fine lot of children," ejaculated a lady motorist in the Rumpus Ridge region. "How many have you, sir?"

"Ought's ought and figger's a figger," began Gap Johnson, the parent of the pack. "Carry one, and—"

"My gracious! What are you doing?"

"Just sorter totaling 'em up, mam,"—Kansas City Star.

Wonderful Piece of Work

Scarcely as big as a tooth, the tiniest skull in the world was brought recently to the United States. It took infinite patience and skill at the hands of a Chinese workman who labored many months to complete the curiosity. It is complete in every detail and carved from a minute piece of ivory, small enough to fit on the tip of a pencil.—Popular Science Monthly.

Roses

These roses under my window make no reference to former roses or to better ones; they are for what they are; they exist with God today. There is no time to them. There is simply the rose; it is perfect in every moment of its existence. Before a leaf-bud has burst, its whole life acts; in the full-blown flower there is no more; in the leafless root there is no less.—Emerson.

A good word in behalf of other costs you little and is worth much.

Bisons, Under Borleske, Have Best State College Football Team In Years

With two games of the 1924 season behind them, the members of the football team of the North Dakota Agricultural college are now being primed for the annual tilt with North Dakota university. This game will be played in Fargo November 1, Homecoming day at the college.

Other conference games are to be played before the Bisons meet the university Flickertails, but all other games lack the intense rivalry between players and fans that the clash between the two state institutions calls forth.

The Bison team, under the direction of Stanley E. Borleske, has developed into the best gridiron union that the state college has had for years. The backfield men, while green and inexperienced, show an abundance of power and drive which makes for good yardage through whatever line opposes them. Injuries have already forced two men out of the lineup. Harry Blakely, end, will be laid up most of the season with ear trouble, while William Gray, tackle, is suffering from a strained arm injured in the game with Jamestown college.

As the team now lines up, John Mach of Grafton gets the first call at quarterback, with Cyril Arnold of Fargo in the utility role. Walter Augustine of Alexandria, Minn., will be used at fullback during most of the season. For halfbacks Coach Borleske has the following men from whom to choose: Ben Rumpeltes of Kearney, Neb., Claudie Miller of Fargo, Earl Griffith of Carrington, Walter Clasen of Pencer, Minn. Wallace Thompson of Fargo will hold the center post. For guards are the following: William Gray of Park Rapids, Minn., Theodore Wall of Beach, Lawrence Souers of Moorhead, Minn.

The men now showing up best at the tackle positions are Allen Keltner of Williston, Francis Hull of Edgeley, Thomas Regan of Devils Lake, Elmer Marks of Fargo, Rae Kneeshaw of Devils Lake. Those who will see play at end during the year are Harry Bridgeford of Larimore, George Bliss of Fargo, Phillip Boise of Bismarck, Harry Blakely of Baker, Ore., and Leslie Sherwood of Fargo.

Other members of the squad include Alden Baillie of Harvey, Leroy Miller of Fargo, George Holta of Bismarck, and Hartzig Hildre of Petersburg.

STATE BALLOT IS COMPLETED

Expiration of Time for Withdrawals Finds Tickets Cleared.

Bismarck, N. D.—North Dakota's ballot for the November 4 election was completed Saturday with the expiration of time for withdrawal of candidates. J. L. Page of Westhope, Democratic nominee for congressman in the Second district, telegraphed his withdrawal, clearing the way for the campaign between M. C. Freerks, nominee of the Nonpartisan league, and Thomas Hall, Republican, and Gerald Nye, LaFollette-Wheeler progressive. Voters in the Second district will also vote between Thomas Hall and Gerald Nye, candidates on a special ballot, November 4, for the balance of the term of George M. Young, who resigned. The term expires next March 4.

On other change in the ballot was made by the receipt of the withdrawal of John Ehr, Democratic nominee for state senator in the 29th district, Ward county.

H. C. Depuy telegraphed his resignation as a candidate for district judge in the Second district late Saturday.

Raiders Seize British Liquor Ship.

New York.—With the capture of a British steamer with 11,000 cases of whiskey aboard, prohibition officials claimed to have caused the collapse of a banker-bootlegger alliance which in the past six months has flooded this part of the country with illicit liquor. As the result of a three months investigation, coast guardsmen seized the 376-ton steamer Frederick B. 15 miles off Monmouth Beach, N. J., Saturday, in which the federal officials call the first real test of the liquor treaty with Great Britain.

WEEKLY MENU SUGGESTIONS

Housework is the recognized vocation of every woman if married, or she is responsible for the housekeeping and meal preparation which is a vital part of it.

SUNDAY—Breakfast: Iced cantaloupe, cream of wheat, top milk. Dinner: New beets buttered, ice cream. Supper: Sandwiches, sliced tomatoes.

MONDAY—Breakfast: Sliced bananas, bran with cream. Dinner: Chicken salad, hot rolls. Supper: Sliced pineapple, layer cake.

TUESDAY—Breakfast: Green Gage plums. Dinner: Deep cherry pie. Supper: Baked custards, cup cakes.

WEDNESDAY—Breakfast: Omelet with ham. Dinner: Cabbage with cheese. Supper: Green apple sauce, brown bread.

THURSDAY—Breakfast: Peaches, cereal with cream, waffles, coffee. Dinner: Cream potatoes, boiled ham. Supper: Raspberries, baking powder biscuits.

FRIDAY—Breakfast: Watermelon, oatmeal, toast, coffee. Dinner: Baked mackerel, raspberry sherbet. Supper: French fried toast, fresh berries.

SATURDAY—Breakfast: Cherries, rolled oats, bacon, eggs. Dinner: Meat pie, cabbage salad. Supper: Baked beans, sandwiches, lemonade.

Deep Cherry Pie.

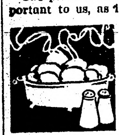
Line a deep earthen dish with a good pastry and invert in the center a china tea cup. Take three pints of ripe cherries, cover with sugar, one or more cupfuls to sweeten. The fruit should rise over the top of the cup and form a mound in the dish. Cover with pastry, wetting the edges and pressing them down well. No openings are made in the crust. Bake at least an hour. At serving time cut the crust into eighths, remove the teacup and serve a portion of the rich red juice with a segment of the crisp crust. Whipped cream may be served if desired.

Cabbage With Cheese.

Cook cabbage until tender, arrange a layer in a baking dish, cover with white sauce and a layer of rich cheese grated, repeat and finish the top with buttered crumbs, bake until the crumbs are brown.

The ideal life is in our blood and never will be still. Sad will be the day for any man when he becomes contented with the thoughts he is thinking and the deeds he is doing—where there is not forever beating at the doors of his soul some great desire to do something larger, which he knows he is meant to do.—Phillips Brooks.

EVERYDAY GOOD THINGS



The plain ordinary food is more important to us, as it is the kind which is served daily in millions of homes. Careful seasoning and nice serving makes an ordinary dish, though plain attractive.

Veal Savory.—Cut meat from a veal soup bone into pieces twice the size of the finger. Place the meat in the kettle, which has been well greased. Grate an onion and one carrot, add one-half cupful of boiling water, salt and pepper to season, and pour over the meat. On top place a bay leaf, lay the bone over this, sprinkle with flour and cover tightly. Set in a slow oven for three hours. When done remove the bone, allowing the marrow to drip over the meat. Serve with rice or mashed potatoes.

Mock Venison.—Hang a leg of mutton in a cool place to ripen as long as possible, while it keeps sweet. Take off the skin and put the mutton into a dripping pan or kettle and pour over the following: Take three heads of garlic or three sliced onions, one-half ounce of peppercorns, one-fourth ounce of allspice crushed, six bay leaves, a dozen sprigs of thyme, the same of parsley, all brought to a boil in three cupfuls of vinegar. Rub this into the meat, rubbing and turning for thirty minutes. Allow the meat to remain in the pickle, covering the meat with thinly-sliced onions until the next day, then repeat the rubbing, turn and cover the other side with onions. Continue this for four days, then wipe the meat dry, rub for half an hour with a pint of hot molasses. Let the meat hang in a cool place until the next day, then wipe dry and roast the same as a leg of mutton. Serve with melted currant jelly. This is some work, but the results are worth it.

Cauliflower With Cheese Sauce.—Cook the imperfect heads until tender, break up into flowerets and serve in a rich white sauce to which a half cupful of grated cheese has been added.

Oysters Louisiane.—Clean and parboil one quart of oysters, reserving the liquor, adding water to make one and one-half cupfuls. Cook three tablespoonfuls of butter with two tablespoonfuls of chopped red pepper and one-half of a tablespoonful of chopped onion. Bring to the boiling point and season with salt, paprika, cayenne and a tablespoonful of orange juice. Arrange in buttered shells, pour over the sauce and sprinkle with parmesan cheese.

MINNEAPOLIS MAN GAINS 34 LBS. TAKING TANLAC
Thought He Would Never Find Relief, Says War Veteran.

"My past four years of good health and a gain of 34 lbs. in weight is all due to the help I have received from Tanlac," is the emphatic statement of John Hadges, a World War veteran, 2641 11th Ave., South, Minneapolis, Minn.

"In 1919 I felt myself going down in health and indigestion, loss of appetite, excited nerves, dizziness and lack of sleep weakened me down to where I was unable to hit a lick of work. I had become fearful of having to carry my misery with me to my grave.

"It certainly was a great day for me when I ran across Tanlac, for since taking this medicine I have no more indigestion troubles, sleep like a child, work without tiring and feel fine."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 40 million bottles sold.

Life Exists Above Fixed Snowline

That animal life ascends the mountains far beyond plant growth is one of the discoveries of the Mount Everest expedition.

"The highest growing plant observed was blue vetch at 18,000 feet," writes Lieut. Col. E. F. Norton, in London Tit-Bits, leader of the expedition. "Yet animals possess permanent habitations as high as 22,000 feet. A minute and inconspicuous black spider hops about on the rocky cliffs and hides beneath stones in those bare places which happen to be swept clear of snow by the wind. I cannot think on what it lives at such a height.

"In these altitudes there is no other living thing—nothing but rock and ice. This little spider is worthy of note, being the highest permanent inhabitant of the earth. We therefore, find life on the highest mountains far above the permanent snowline."

The Feminine Touches

The elderly and wealthy bachelor, always the possessor of a home known to his friends to be the height of comfort and tasteful decorations, boasted for years that he would never marry—but finally capitulated. A short while later, he was entertaining an old friend at his home. "Look here," he said, pointing to a sewing basket and two or three strands of thread on the carpet, "these are the things that make life worth living. And this," he said, drawing a needle from the arm of an over-stuffed chair, "is what impresses one with the truth of this, that it is the little feminine touches that count."

Tree Resembles Map

Trees sometimes assume very grotesque shapes and one can trace in their branches the outlines of animals or birds, says London Tit-Bits.

Occasionally, too, the monarchs of the forest may resemble the giants and monsters of legendary lore. But not often do they grow in such a way as to give the idea of a geographical formation.

Such a tree, however, can be seen growing in "The Lady of the Lake" district of Scotland. Its short and long limbs give a distinct impression of the map of England.

Flats on Wheels

Caravans as cozy as small flats, with a speed of 30 miles an hour, are the newest form of luxury for Londoners, who love the simple life. The caravans are 12 feet long, and afford sleeping accommodations for three persons They have good kitchen, sinks and ventilated larders.

Wonderful Invention

"Radio is a wonderful invention."

"It is, indeed," answered Mr. Meekton. "I can't get over being surprised at the way Henrietta will sit quietly and let it monopolize the conversation."—Washington Star.

A Woman's Health!
Joplin, Mo.—"I have used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and consider it a wonderful tonic for women and superior to any other remedy. It built me up in health and strength and relieved me of all the distressing feelings which usually go with feminine weakness. That is just what other remedies, which I had tried, failed to do."—Mrs. Ada Hatley, 1317 Virginia Ave.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage containing a Power of Sale, by reason of which default said Power of Sale has become operative and the Assignee of the Mortgagee hereinafter named is authorized to declare the whole sum due and he hereby does declare said sum due, which mortgage was executed by Frederick M. Olson, a single man, mortgagor, to J. D. Layton, mortgagee, dated May 21st, 1923, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 4th day of June, 1923, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 115 of Mortgages on page 493.

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said J. D. Layton, Mortgagee, to Clement Kamrowski, by written assignment dated October 23rd, 1923, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 25th day of October, 1923, at 11 o'clock A. M., in Book 115 of Mortgages on page 593.

And whereas, the said Clement Kamrowski, the assignee and holder of said mortgage, has elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the Power of Sale therein contained; and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Fifty-five Hundred ($5500.00) Dollars, with accumulated interest from the 21st day of May, 1923, at the rate of six and one-half per cent per annum; and whereas, the Power of Sale has become operative and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, Therefore, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz:

The Northwest Quarter (NW¼) of Section Sixteen (16) in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North, of Range Forty (40) West, of the Fifth Principal Meridian in Minnesota containing One Hundred sixty (160) acres, more or less, according to the United States Government Survey thereof.

Which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the front door of the County Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 28th day of October, at 10 o'clock A. M., of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the amount then due on said mortgage and interest and all delinquent taxes, if any, on said premises, together with the costs and disbursements of such sale and Seventy-five Dollars, as the statutory attorney's fees stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Notice is hereby given, that default has been made in the conditions of a mortgage executed by Ludwig Klinge, a single man, Mortgagor, to the Farm Loan Security Company of Thief River Falls, Minnesota, a Corporation, Mortgagee, dated July 1, 1920, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Marshall, Minnesota, on the 10th day of November, 1920, at 11 o'clock A. M., in Book 100 of Mortgages, on page 213.

That on the 20th day of November, 1920, said mortgage was assigned by the said Farm Loan Security Company of Thief River Falls, Minnesota, a Corporation, Mortgagee, to Albertus Hinrichs, and the Deed of Assignment recorded on July 13, 1922, at 8 o'clock A. M., in the Office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, in Book 110 of Mortgages, on page 59 thereof.

That thereafter, to-wit: on the 20th day of June, 1922, the said Albertus Hinrichs assigned said mortgage by assignment in writing dated on that day, and which Assignment was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 13th day of July, 1922, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 103 of Mortgages, on page 380 thereof.

That such default consists in the nonpayment, when due, of the principal and interest which said mortgage was given to secure; that the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at this date, is the sum of One Thousand Seventy Dollars ($1070.00).

That the premises described in and covered by said mortgage are described as follows: The Northwest Quarter (NW¼) of Section Thirteen (13), Township One Hundred Fifty-five (155) North, of Range Forty-two (42) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian and situated in Marshall County, Minnesota.

That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, said mortgage will be foreclosed by the sale of said premises, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, by the sheriff of Marshall County, Minnesota, at the West front door of the Marshall County Court House in the City of Warren, in Marshall County, Minnesota, on Monday, the 20th day of October, 1924, at 10 o'clock A. M., of that day, to satisfy the amount then due on said mortgage, together with the costs of such sale, and Fifty Dollars ($50.00), Attorney's fees, stipulated in said mortgage.

Dated September 2nd, 1924.

St. Paul, Minn., June 14, 1924.

HONORABLE MIKE HOLM,
Secretary of State, Capitol.

SIR: As required by section 46, General Statutes 1913, I have the honor to furnish you herewith, a statement of the purposes and effects of all amendments proposed to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by the legislature of 1923 and which are to be submitted to the electors of the state at the general election in 1924.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 1.

Chapter 447, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1923 proposes an amendment to section 5 of article 9 of the constitution of the state. The section now reads as follows:

"Section 5. For the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenditures, the state may contract public debts, but such debts shall never, in the aggregate, exceed two hundred and fifty thousand dollars; every such debt shall be authorized by law, for some single object, to be distinctly specified therein; and no such law shall take effect until it shall have been passed by the vote of two-thirds of the members of each branch of the legislature, to be recorded by yeas and nays on the journals of each house respectively; and every such law shall levy a tax annually sufficient to pay the annual interest of such debt, and also a tax sufficient to pay the principal of such debt within ten years from the final passage of such law, and shall specially appropriate the proceeds of such taxes to the payment of such principal and interest; and such appropriation and taxes shall not be repealed, postponed, or diminished, until the principal and interest of such debt shall have been wholly paid. The state shall never contract any debts for works of internal improvements, or be a party in carrying on such works, except in cases where grants of land or other property shall have been made to the state, especially dedicated by the grant to specific purposes, and in such cases the state shall devote thereto the avails of such grants, and may pledge or appropriate the revenues derived from such works in aid of their completion."

If amended this section will read as follows:

"Section 5. For the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenditures, the state may contract public debts, but such debts shall never, in the aggregate, exceed two hundred and fifty thousand dollars; every such debt shall be authorized by law, for some single object, to be distinctly specified therein; and no such law shall take effect until it shall have been passed by the vote of two-thirds of the members of each branch of the legislature, to be recorded by yeas and nays on the journals of each house respectively; and every such law shall levy a tax annually sufficient to pay the annual interest of such debt, and also a tax sufficient to pay the principal of such debt within ten years from the final passage of such law, and shall specially appropriate the proceeds of such taxes to the payment of such principal and interest; and such appropriation and taxes shall not be repealed, postponed, or diminished, until the principal and interest of such debt shall have been wholly paid. The state shall never contract any debts for works of internal improvement, or be a party in carrying on such works, except as authorized by section 16 of article 9, and by article 16 of this constitution; but it may levy an excise tax upon any substance, material, fluid, force or other means or instrumentality, or the business of dealing in, selling or producing any or all thereof, used or useful, in producing or generating power for propelling motor or other vehicles used on the public highways of this state, and shall place the proceeds of such tax in the trunk highway fund provided for in section 2 of said article 16 and further except in cases where grants of land or other property shall have been made to the state, especially dedicated by the grant to specific purposes, and in such cases the state shall devote thereto the avails of such grants, and may pledge or appropriate the revenues derived from such works in aid of their completion."

The purpose of the proposed amendment is to confer express authority upon the legislature to provide a special tax on gasoline or other substances used, or useful, for the propulsion of motor vehicles on the public highways of the state or on the business of dealing in, selling or producing such substances. The money so raised by such tax to be used for the construction and maintenance of trunk highways.

The effect of the amendment, if adopted, will be that the cost of the construction and maintenance of trunk highways, the whole of which is now paid by a direct tax on motor vehicles, supplemented by federal aid, will be borne in part by the revenue derived from such gasoline tax so-called, as the legislature may impose.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 2.

Chapter 448, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1923 proposes an amendment to section 36 of article 4 of the constitution of the state. This [illegible] city or village [illegible] after [illegible] for its own government as a city consistent with and subject to the laws of this state, as follows: The legislature shall provide, under such restrictions as it deems proper, for a board of fifteen freeholders, who shall be and for the past five years shall have been qualified voters thereof, to be appointed by the district judges of the judicial district in which the city or village is situated, as the legislature may determine, for a term in no event to exceed six years, which board shall, within six months after its appointment, return to the chief magistrate of said city or village a draft of said charter, signed by the members of said board, or a majority thereof. Such charter shall be submitted to the qualified voters of such city or village at the next election thereafter, and if four-sevenths of the qualified voters voting at such election shall ratify the same it shall, at the end of thirty days thereafter, become the charter of such city or village as a city, and supersede any existing charter and amendments thereof; Provided, that in cities having patrol limits now established, such charter shall require a three-fourths majority vote of the qualified voters voting at such election to change the patrol limits now established. Before any city shall incorporate under this act the legislature shall prescribe by law the general limits within which such charter shall be framed. Duplicate certificates shall be made setting forth the charter proposed and its ratification, which shall be signed by the chief magistrate of said city or village and authenticated by its corporate seal. One of said certificates shall be deposited in the office of the secretary of state, and the other, after being recorded in the office of the register of deeds for the county in which such city or village lies, shall be deposited among the archives of such city or village, and all courts shall take judicial notice thereof. Such charter so deposited may be amended by proposal therefor made by a board of fifteen commissioners aforesaid, published for at least thirty days in three newspapers of general circulation in such city or village, and accepted by three-fifths of the qualified voters of such city or village voting at the next election and not otherwise; but such charter shall always be in harmony with and subject to the constitution and laws of the state of Minnesota. The legislature may prescribe the duties of the commission relative to submitting amendments of charter to the vote of the people, and shall provide that upon application of five per cent of the legal voters of any such city or village, by written petition, such commission shall submit to the vote of the people proposed amendments to such charter set forth in said petition. The board of freeholders above provided for shall be permanent, and all the vacancies by death, disability to perform duties, resignation or removal from the corporate limits, or expiration of term of office, shall be filled by appointment in the same manner as the original board was created, and said board shall always contain its full complement of members. It shall be a feature of all such charters that there shall be provided, among other things, for a mayor or chief magistrate, and a legislative body of either one or two houses; if of two houses, at least one of them shall be elected by general vote of the electors. In submitting any such charter or amendment thereto to the qualified voters of such city or village any alternate section or article may be presented for the choice of the voters, and may be voted on separately without prejudice to other articles or sections of the charter or any amendments thereto. The legislature may provide general laws relating to affairs of cities, the application of which may be limited to cities of over fifty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of fifty and not less than twenty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of twenty and not less than ten thousand inhabitants, or to cities of ten thousand inhabitants or less, which shall apply equally to all such cities of either class, and which shall be paramount while in force to the provisions relating to the same matter included in the local charter herein provided for. But no local charter, provision or ordinance passed thereunder shall supersede any general law of the state defining or punishing crimes or misdemeanors."

If amended this section will read as follows:

"Section 36. Any city or village in this state may frame a charter for its own government as a city consistent with and subject to the laws of this state, as follows: The legislature shall provide, under such restrictions as it deems proper, for a board of fifteen freeholders, who shall be and for the past five years shall have been qualified voters thereof, to be appointed by the district judges of the judicial district in which the city or village is situated, as the legislature may determine, for a term in no event to exceed six years, which board shall, within six months after its appointment, return to the chief magistrate of said city or village a draft of said charter, signed by the members of said board, or a majority thereof. Such charter so deposited may be amended by proposal therefor made by a board of fifteen commissioners aforesaid, published for at least ten days in any daily newspaper of general circulation in such city or village, or if there be no daily newspaper of general circulation in such city or village then for two successive weeks in a weekly newspaper of general circulation in such city or village, and accepted by three-fifths of the qualified voters of such city or village voting at the next election and not otherwise; but such charter shall always be in harmony with and subject to the constitution and laws of the state of Minnesota. The legislature may prescribe the duties of the commission relative to submitting amendments of charter to the vote of the people, and shall provide that upon application of five per cent of the legal voters of any such city or village, by written petition, such commission shall submit to the vote of the people proposed amendments to such charter set forth in said petition. In submitting any such charter or amendment thereto to the qualified voters of such city or village any alternate section or article may be presented for the choice of the voters, and may be voted on separately without prejudice to other articles or sections of the charter or any amendments thereto. The legislature may provide general laws relating to affairs of cities, the applications of which may be limited to cities over fifty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of fifty and not less than twenty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of twenty and not less than ten thousand inhabitants, or to cities of ten thousand inhabitants or less, which shall apply equally to all such cities of either class, and which shall be paramount while in force to the provisions relating to the same matter included in the local charter herein provided for. But no local charter, provision or ordinance passed thereunder shall supersede any general law of the state defining or punishing crimes or misdemeanors."

The purpose of said amendment is to change the number of newspapers in which proposed amendments of home rule charters of cities and villages must be published and the duration of such publications.

The effect of said amendments, if adopted, will be to authorize the publication of proposed amendments to the home rule charter of a city or village for ten days in one daily newspaper of general circulation therein, if there be such a newspaper, or once each week for two successive weeks in a weekly newspaper of general circulation therein, if there be no such daily newspaper, instead of publishing the same for thirty days in three newspapers of general circulation therein as now required.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 3.

Chapter 449 Session Laws Minnesota for the year 1923 proposes an amendment to the constitution of Minnesota by adding thereto a new article, to be known as Article 17, to read as follows:

Article 17.

"Section 1. The legislature by law may establish one state owned public terminal grain elevator at Duluth, Minnesota, and one at Minneapolis, Minnesota, acquired by purchase, lease or exercise of the right of eminent domain, sites and facilities therefor, and provide for the construction, maintenance and operation thereof by the state.

Section 2. The legislature by law may provide for the issue and sale of bonds of the state in such amount as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of Section 1 of this article.

Section 3. Any and all provisions of the constitution of the state of Minnesota inconsistent with the provisions of this article are hereby repealed, so far, but only so far, as the same prohibit or limit the power of the legislature to enact laws authorizing or permitting the doing of the things hereinbefore authorized."

The purpose of said amendment is to expressly empower the legislature to establish, construct, operate and maintain two state owned public terminal elevators.

The effect of said amendment, if adopted, will be to empower the legislature to acquire by purchase, lease or the exercise of the right of eminent domain, sites for one state owned public terminal elevator at Duluth, Minnesota, and another at Minneapolis, Minnesota, to establish, construct, operate and maintain said elevators, to issue and sell bonds of the state in such amount as may be necessary to acquire said sites and to establish, construct, operate and maintain said elevators, and to repeal all provisions of the state constitution inconsistent with said amendment.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 4.

Chapter 450, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1923 proposes an amendment to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by adding thereto a new article, to succeed article 16, and to be appropriately numbered, to read as follows:

Article ....

"Section 1. Laws may be enacted for the purpose of encouraging and promoting forestation and reforestation of lands in this state, whether owned by private persons or the public, including irrepealable provisions for definite and limited taxation of such lands during a term of years, and for a yield tax at or after the end of such term, upon the timber and other forest products so grown.

"Section 2. Any and all provisions of the constitution of the state of Minnesota inconsistent with the provisions of this article, are hereby repealed, so far, but only so far, as the same prohibit or limit the power of the legislature to enact laws authorizing or permitting the doing of the things hereinbefore authorized."

The purpose of said amendment is to empower the legislature to enact laws to encourage and promote forestation and reforestation of publicly and privately owned lands.

The effect of said amendment, if adopted, will be to empower the legislature to enact laws to encourage and promote forestation and reforestation of publicly and privately owned lands, and to that end to enact irrepealable laws for a definite and limited taxation for a term of years of lands devoted to forestation or reforestation, and laws for a yield tax, at the end of or after such term, upon the timber of other forest products so grown upon said lands, and to repeal provisions of the state constitution inconsistent with said amendment.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 5.

Chapter 451, Session Laws of Minnesota for 1923 proposes an amendment to the constitution of said state by adding thereto a new article, to be known as Article 17 (a), to read as follows:

Article 17 (a).

"Section 1. The state and (or) any of its political subdivisions, if and whenever authorized by the legislature, may contract debts and pledge the public credit for and engage in any work reasonably tending to prevent or abate forest fires, including the compulsory clearing and improvement of wild lands (whether belonging to the public or privately owned) and the assessment against such lands of the value of all benefits so conferred and the payment of damages so sustained in excess of such benefits.

"Section 2. Any and all provisions of the constitution of the state of Minnesota inconsistent with the provisions of this article, are hereby repealed, so far, but only so far, as the same prohibit or limit the power of the legislature to enact laws authorizing or permitting the doing of the things hereinbefore authorized."

The purpose of said amendment is to expressly empower the state, and its political subdivisions, to undertake the prevention and abatement of forest fires, and to incur debts and pledge the public credit in so doing.

The effect of said amendment, if adopted, will be to empower the state, and any of its political subdivisions when authorized by the legislature so to do, to engage in any work reasonably tending to prevent or abate forest fires, including the compulsory clearing and improvement of publicly and privately owned wild lands, to assess against said lands the benefits accruing thereto from such work, and to pay the damages to such lands in excess of the benefits, if any resulting from such work, to contract debts and pledge the public credit in carrying on said work, and to repeal all provisions of the state constitution inconsistent with said amendment.

Yours respectfully,
CLIFFORD L. HILTON,
Attorney General.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage containing a Power of Sale, by reason of which default said Power of Sale has become operative, and the Administrator of the Assignee of the Mortgagee hereinafter named is authorized to declare the whole sum due and he hereby does declare said sum due, which mortgage was duly executed by Engebret S. Moe, a single man, Mortgagor, to D. B. Bakke, Mortgagee, dated April 23rd, 1919, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 25th day of April, A. D. 1919, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 93 of Mortgages, on page 252.

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said D. B. Bakke, Mortgagee, to Deposit Bank of Winona, Winona, Minnesota, by written assignment, dated May 17th, 1919, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 24th day of May, A. D. 1919, at 10 o'clock A. M., in Book 86 of Mortgages, on page 270.

Which said mortgage, together with the debt, secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Deposit Bank of Winona, Winona, Minnesota, to Bridget Ryan, by written assignment, dated September 13th, A. D. 1919, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 17th day of September, A. D. 1924, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 110 of Mortgages, on page 324.

And whereas, the said Administrator of the Estate of said Bridget Ryan, the assignee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms of said mortgage and the Power of Sale therein contained, and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice, the sum of Thirty-six Hundred Dollars ($3600.00), with accumulated interest from the 23rd day of April, 1921, at the rate of six per cent per annum; and whereas, the said Power of Sale has become operative and no action or proceedings having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz:

Lots One (1) and Two (2), the Southeast Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (SE¼SW¼) and the Southwest Quarter of the Southeast Quarter (SW¼SE¼) of Section Twenty-five (25), the Southwest Quarter of the Southeast Quarter (SW¼SE¼) of Section Thirty-three (33), all in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North of Range Forty-two (42), West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, and,

The North Half of the Southeast Quarter (N½SE¼) and the North Half of the Southwest Quarter (N½SW¼) of Section Thirty-one (31) in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North of Range Forty-one (41) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, containing a total of Three Hundred Thirty-six and 55-100 (336.55) acres more or less according to the United States Government survey thereof, all in Marshall County and State of Minnesota.

Which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the Front door of the County Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State on the 18th day of November, 1924, at 10 o'clock A. M., of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the amount then due on said mortgage and interest, together with the costs and disbursements of such sale and Seventy-five Dollars attorneys fees as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

Dated September 20, 1924.

JAMES P. TOWEY, as Administrator of the Estate of Bridget Ryan, deceased, the said Bridget Ryan being the Assignee of Mortgagee.

W. J. SMITH,
Attorney for Administrator of the Estate of Bridget Ryan, deceased, the said Bridget Ryan being the Assignee of Mortgagee,
Morgan Block,
Winona, Minnesota.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage containing a Power of Sale, by reason of which default said Power of Sale has become operative, and the Assignee of the Mortgagee hereinafter named is authorized to declare the whole sum due, which mortgage was executed by Hans Steusrud and Nord Steusrud, his wife, Mortgagors, to Deposit Bank of Winona, Winona, Minnesota, Mortgagee, dated June 22nd, 1920, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota on the 25th day of June, A. D. 1920, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 92 of Mortgages, on page 279.

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Deposit Bank of Winona, Winona, Minnesota, Mortgagee, to Frank Jilk, by written assignment, dated June 28th, 1920, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 17th day of September, A. D. 1924, at 10 o'clock A. M., in Book 110 of Mortgages, on page 325.

And whereas, the said Frank Jilk, the assignee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms of said mortgage and the Power of Sale therein contained; and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of Fifteen Hundred Dollars ($1500.00), with accumulated interest from the 22nd day of June, 1921, at the rate of six per cent per annum; and whereas, the said Power of Sale has become operative and no action or proceedings having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz:

Lots Seven (7) and Eight (8), of Section Two (2), Lot Four (4), and the North Half of the Southwest Quarter (N½SW¼) of Section One (1), in Township One Hundred Fifty-Six (156) North, of Range Forty-two (42) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota.

Which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the front door of the County Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 11th day of November, 1924, at 10:30 o'clock A. M. of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the amount then due on said mortgage and interest, together with the costs and disbursements of such sale and Fifty Dollars attorney's fees stipulated at attorney's fees in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

Dated September 20, 1924.

Valuable Hints to Patrons
Delivering Cream to our Creamery
Pasteurization is very important, yet to have it done in an inefficient way is worse than not at all. In view of the fact we ask the cooperation and urge upon all patrons to try and do their share to help us First— You must try and bring a 1st grade cream and have same delivered in the forenoon if possible. Second— Help us to get our average test 30 per cent or better. Sweet cream can be pasteurized more efficiently than sour, and high testing cream will save you more money for the reason that with a low testing cream it is impossible to churn it without considerable butterfat being drained out with the buttermilk.

The Truant Soul

By Victor Rousseau

Copyright by W. G. Chapman

DOCTOR AND NURSE

Now Joan could see his face, and, to her astonishment, it did not bear the expression of the smirking bully whom she had seen that morning, nor yet of the man who had addressed another man in such terms as one might use to a slave. It was not an unkindly face. And it was unmistakably that of a sick man.

For a moment she remembered the stories told of his behavior in the operating theater, of the gentleness that seemed to transform the man, as if he possessed a dual personality.

"I am Miss Wentworth," she explained. "I came to ask if you won't reconsider your decision to suspend me. I always wanted to be a nurse. Doctor Lancaster, apart from my own interests, I want to graduate to be able to help others. Won't you give me another opportunity?"

Here are hero and heroine. The reader who wants mystery, plot, action and a real love story can get it here in "The Truant Soul." Is it a story of dual personality or of an impostor and his victim? Is the woman with the maternal instinct the best wife as well as the best nurse? Can a victim of the morphine habit be permanently cured? These are questions the reader asks himself as he reads.

The author is Victor Rousseau, whose many stories of American life have given him a large public.

Chapter I

—1—

"I let him see I wouldn't stand for any language like that, and I reckon he understood, even if I didn't have to say much," remarked the dark-haired girl to Joan Wentworth. "It doesn't seem to have occurred to Doctor Lancaster yet that a nurse is a human being under her uniform.

"If he'd treat us half as nicely as he treats some of his lady friends," she added, in a suggestive tone that changed into the accentuation of ordinary speech under Joan's discouraging look. "I've seen him driving them round town nights in his auto, and I've never seen the same one twice. I guess he takes it out on us when they've been mean to him."

Joan did not answer her. She was watching the head surgeon as he came into the operating theater. At his entrance the general buzz of conversation ceased, as if the outpouring of words had been cut off with a knife. The students on the benches settled themselves in their places and craned their heads forward intently. The two assistant surgeons, Ivers and MacPherson, assumed attitudes of constraint, for everybody was constrained in Lancaster's presence. The orderly, who had been peering through the crack of the swinging door into the anesthetic room, where the head nurse was holding the patient's wrist and watching the face beneath the mask intently, straightened himself and stood up in military fashion. Only the visiting doctors seemed at their ease as they advanced to shake hands with John Lancaster.

They had come from several neighboring cities, drawn by the news that Lancaster was to perform his famous operation of arterial excision, which was just then the subject of discussion in the medical press. Plenty of surgeons had tried to remove a section of one of the larger blood vessels, but only Lancaster had succeeded in bringing down the mortality to 15 per cent.

Lancaster was something of a mystery both to his colleagues and to the nursing staff. The Lancaster fund supported the Southern hospital, and John Lancaster was firmly established at the head of the institution. The board of guardians, which existed according to the terms laid down in his father's will, had apparently only an advisory capacity, and it was supple and plastic in Lancaster's hands. And John Lancaster was more feared and admired than any doctor in the country.

Feared by most for his tyranny, admired by a very few on account of his extraordinary skill, he seemed to have a dual personality. The man whose fast life was the scandal of the conservative little southern seaport, who was ostracized by the better families, whose infrequent appearances in the hospital were usually the occasion for injustice, storms and dismissals, changed in the operating theater into a man whose gentleness and humility and skill made him adored for the time by all who came into contact with him. But it was only rarely that a case occurred that required his attention.

On such occasions his manner was in itself remarkable. He would slip stealthily into his private room, dress there, and emerge masked like a mummy to perform his miracle almost in silence, and afterward to make his escape in a way suggestive of his having performed some shameful action.

So much Joan Wentworth had heard. Naturally she watched his entrance on this, her first day of surgical work, with absorbed interest. But Lancaster came in unmasked, and Joan could discern nothing humble or secretive in the self-satisfied face or the brisk manner in which he greeted the visiting surgeons.

He looked a man of seven or eight and thirty, and he bore his years heavily. The eyes were lined and a little sunken; the features, which Joan had seen only a few times during her eighteen months of work at the hospital, exercised, as they had always done, a rather repellent effect upon the girl. The face was eminently cruel and hard. Nevertheless the man obviously dominated the assembly.

He dominated her. She was much more afraid of some nervous lapse in Lancaster's presence than of seeing the use of the knife. The hissing of the steam tank, the nervous movements of the spectators upon the benches, whose heads seemed to swing with a uniform and rhythmical motion, the deepening sense of constraint, acted upon her with a sort of hypnotic effect not lessened by Lancaster's decisive manner.

She pulled the tray of instruments out of the boiling water and set it down upon the table by the side of the bichloride solution. Lancaster, who had been pulling on his rubber gloves, came to her side and plunged both hands into the antiseptic fluid. There was a look of self-conscious satisfaction upon his face, and Joan thought that every gesture and each movement was designed to impress the visitors. Presently she became sure of it. The man was acting. A feeling of disgust came over her.

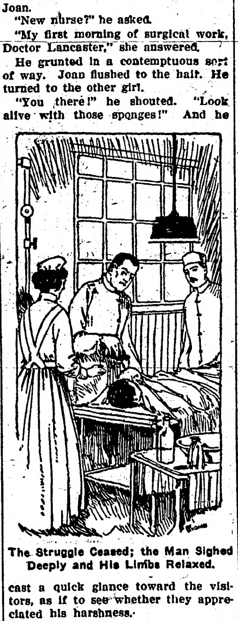
Lancaster cast a quick glance at Joan.

"New nurse?" he asked.

"My first morning of surgical work, Doctor Lancaster," she answered.

He grunted in a contemptuous sort of way. Joan flushed to the hair. He turned to the other girl.

"You there!" he shouted. "Look alive with those sponges!" And he cast a quick glance toward the visitors, as if to see whether they appreciated his harshness.



The Struggle Ceased; the Man Sighed Deeply and His Limbs Relaxed.

A look of chagrin came over the dark-haired girl's face, but she ran to obey and dropped the wet sponges into the bichloride with shaking fingers. At the same moment the swing door opened and the stretcher with the patient appeared, wheeled by the orderly. Behind it walked the head nurse, still maintaining her crouching attitude as she moved. The stretcher stopped inside the theater, and the head nurse and orderly lifted the man who lay upon it on the glass table.

He mumbled and tried to raise himself. The nurse put her hands about his shoulders, pressing them down, while the orderly held the body, protesting against the indignity about to be offered to it, to which it had emphatically not consented, whatever arrangement had been decreed by the brain. Lancaster's harsh voice boomed through the theater: "That's no way to bring a patient here, Miss Symons! Deep anesthesia!"

The head nurse lifted her face for an instant. "There's a history of nephritis, Doctor Lancaster," she said. "The pulse is 150, and Doctor MacPherson said—"

"Who's running this business?" shouted Lancaster, striding toward her; and Joan was sure that he looked out of the corner of his eye toward the visitors.

He snatched the green ether bottle out of the nurse's hand and poured a quantity of the fluid upon the mask. The struggle ceased, the man sighed deeply, and his limbs relaxed. The nauseating stench of the ether fumes made Joan's head reel. It seemed to fill the theater. Miss Symons, flushing, but displaying no resentment, took the bottle from Lancaster's hand and resumed her position, holding the patient's wrist and peering into his face, the green bottle upraised.

The girl who was in charge of the sponges whispered bitterly to her:

"He doesn't know how to treat a woman—not a lady. He isn't our kind. My! he must have been on a terrible racket last night! He can't keep up that gait much longer unless he gives up his work here."

Joan ignored her; she had concentrated all her attention upon Lancaster's probable demands; she was resolved not to be found wanting. It was said that Lancaster was absolutely merciless and had ruined many a girl's career by refusing to allow her to complete her graduating course. He was tyrannical, overlooked nothing, and never appreciated good work. Rumor went that when a certain nurse had once handed him benzine instead of alcohol he had taken her by the shoulders and run her bodily out of the hospital, forbidding her to show her face there again.

"He can't last long if he leads that sort of life," the dark-haired girl repeated. "You'd think he'd be old enough to have learned how to pretend to be a gentleman even if he isn't one."

Joan shook her off mentally, as one chases away a persistent fly. For the tenth time she counted the instruments in the tray. Lancaster picked up a scalpel, and MacPherson and Ivers took up their positions, one on either side of him. The operation was beginning.

The visiting surgeons watched with an occasional whispered remark. The assistants already were snapping the little forceps upon the ends of the divided arteries. Lancaster issued his commands from time to time, without looking back:

"Sponges!"

"One—two," whispered the dark-haired girl. "Three—four—five—"

"Bistoury. Scissors. Dilator. Number four Simms."

Joan never faltered. She felt easier in her mind, her quick hands found the instruments in the tray the moment Lancaster demanded them. Meanwhile the dark-haired girl never ceased counting the sponges:

"Six—seven—eight—nine—"

Suddenly Lancaster stopped, wheeled and turned fiercely upon her. "For God's sake, stop that chatter!" he cried.

The girl let a sponge fall, snatched it up, and shot an apprehensive glance at him. Joan saw that she was losing her nerve in spite of her brave talk of a few minutes before. It was the critical time of a very dangerous and difficult process. She tried to pull herself together.

Yet, without looking up, she realized that a sense of general apprehension had stolen through the operating theater. The nurse at the head of the table, looking like a veiled Vestal, had not shifted her position since the beginning of the operation, except that from time to time her hand shifted slightly as she let one or two drops of ether fall upon the mask. MacPherson and Ivers stirred busily, their heads bent level with their chief's as they moved to and fro at their work. The patient began to mutter. Then a hand, upraised in weak protest, struck a clamp from Ivers' fingers. It rattled upon the floor.

"Keep him quiet, Miss Symons, confound you!" shouted Lancaster.

"Doctor Lancaster, the pulse—" she began. But, after a quick glance at the head surgeon, she shrugged her shoulders, tilted the bottle, and deliberately poured out nearly all the ether remaining in it. The renewed stench of the anesthetic filled the room. Joan saw the benches swing, the craning faces seemed to become multiplied; Lancaster and the two assistants, the visiting surgeons were tiny gnomes, an immense distance away, surrounding a tiny table on which a doll-like figure lay extended. She tried to bring them back into focus, but could not; and, what was worse, she felt that she had lost her nurse's sense of divining the surgeon's requirements before he gave expression to them.

The feeling of suspense was growing. Something was wrong, and although nothing had been said, even the students on the top row of benches farthest from the table were aware of it. The assistant doctors appeared as busy as ever, and yet they seemed at a loss, and once or twice looked up at Lancaster as if his technic was puzzling them. Joan saw two of the visiting surgeons exchange brief glances, one with inquiry, the other, answering, with uplifted eyebrows. Once Lancaster stopped; he resumed his work, stopped again, and stood staring at his work. Then he wheeled round upon Joan, the upper part of his body seeming to move upon a pivot, while his lower limbs remained stationary.

This is certainly a bad beginning for both hero and heroine—surgeon and nurse. What next?

Model Prayer for Authors

Old Thomas Fuller had a prayer he used before starting to pen his sermons, which should commend itself to writers generally: "Lord, lo! here is Thine alphabet. Grant to us that we may put the letters together so as to make good sense."—Boston Transcript.

Chicago—The Prince of Sukothai, brother of the king of Siam and his wife, the Princess Prajatipok, traveling incognito, are here for a three day visit of pleasure.

Pittsburgh—Roy A. Hunt, vicepresident of the Aluminum Company of America, declared charges of monopoly and unfair practices, made against the company by the federal trade commission were "biased and unfair to the last degree."

Aberdeen, Wash.—Saick Kondo, Japanese senior in Lincoln High school, Tacoma, was awarded a loving cup for the best essay on American citizenship by a high school student of this state.

Camden, N. J.—Secretary of the Treasury Andrew W. Mellon, filed a protest against an increase in his taxes of $168 on 53 acres of land he owns in the borough of Brooklawn, N. J.

New York—A suntanned Canadian voyager came unheralded to the barge office at the battery. Forty-two days ago, George H. G. Smyth of Toronto, 33 years old, left Sidney, Cape Breton island, Nova Scotia, in a 15 foot open canoe. He paddled 1,350 miles in salt water and claims to have set a record.

St. Johnsbury, Vt.—Edouard St. Aubin of Montreal, charged with attempting to smuggle Chinese into the United States, and his sweetheart, Emerilda Gagne, also of Montreal, charged with attempting to aid St. Aubin in escaping from jail, were given leave of absence from the Caledonia county jail to be married.

Chicago — Tony Kissane, recently tried for murder and once under suspicion in the Roundout mail train robbery, was under arrest charged with being the leader of a gang of bank robbers and payroll bandits. With him in custody were six men, who, the police stated, were members of his band.

Trenton, N. J.—After a long battle which finally resulted in expressed approval of the child welfare amendment to the federal constitution, the democratic state convention adopted a platform in which the Ku Klux Klan, the Volstead act and the Hobart enforcement act of the state were denounced by name.

Conway, S. C.—Edmund D. Bigham, alleged slayer of five members of his own family, was found guilty of the murder of his brother, L. Smiley Bigham, by a jury in Horry county here. The verdict was returned after two and one-half hours deliberation by jurors.

Johnston City, Ill.—Joseph L. Herrington, for whose death his widow and Robert Tate, a miner, have been indicted by the grand jury, was given enough poison to kill 39 normal persons, according to a report received here from the chemistry department of the Illinois University Chicago — William Fahy, the postal inspector who was arrested and indicted on a charge of conspiracy in connection with the $2,000,000 mail train robbery at Roundout, Ill., last June, was arraigned before United States Commissioner Beitler. He waived examination and prepared to renew his $50,000 bond on which he has been at liberty.

Chicago — Railroad profits totaled $10,000,000,000 in the last 12 years and now are running at approximately $1,000,000,000 a year, E. H. Fitzgerald, president of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, Freight Handlers and Other Station Employees, declared in opening the wage hearing involving the brotherhood's request for a restoration of 1920 wage rates before the United States railroad labor board. Fitzgerald cited the increasing prosperity of the industry as ground for a reconsideration of present wage rates by the board.

Sports

Minneapolis—Showing vast improvement over the form they displayed against North Dakota, the Gophers played hard and at time savage football, overwhelming the Haskell Indians by a score of 20 to 0 before a throng of 18,000 rooters at Memorial stadium.

Latonia, Ky.—Smashing all existing Kentucky track records for a mile and a quarter, Sarazen, three-year-old chestnut gelding, owned by Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt II, vanquished Epinard, pride of the French turf, in the final race of the International series before a crowd of 50,000 to 60,000 spectators.

Washington—Uncle Sam cleared $109,310.40 this year as his personal share of the world series, according to figures compiled by the internal revenue bureau of the treasury. This sum represents the 10 per cent tax gathered on receipts from the total attendance of 283,675 on the seven games. The receipts amounted to $1,093,104.00. In addition to the admission tax the government will receive the income tax on amounts received by the players, managers, owners and all who profited by the series.

Washington—The world's champions of 1924, as a baseball team disbanded, leaving their record engraved in the permanent history of the sport and in the memories of its followers. Ceremonies marking the disintegration of the fighting aggregation which brought Washington her first league and series pennant were informally staged in the local clubhouse. They consisted in the simple handshake, a slap on the shoulder and "see you next spring" as most members of the team departed by train and automobile for their several homes or for the scenes of winter activities. Prior to leave-taking, Manager "Bucky" Harris appeared with a fist-full of checks marking the winners' split of the world series "take." There were 24 checks, each for $5,959.64, drawn to the 22 active members of the Senators, with two additional made out to Nick Altrock and Mike Martin, the club trainers and commanders of what in the army would be the morale section.

Foreign

Shanghai —Major Pedro Zanni, who has been delayed here by bad weather, plans to continue his Argentine air cruise around the world by flying from Shanghai to Kagoshima, Japan, his first stop in that country.

Allahabad, India — Three were killed and 20 injured in rioting between Hindus and Moslems at the close of the celebration of a Hindu festival here. British Indian troops and armed police restored order and are patroling the city to prevent further outbreaks.

Paris—Premier Mussolini's speech in Milan is commented on by the press in Paris as extremely significant, especially the passage in which he declares that Italy has a 440,000 excess of birth every year and the only way out of the surplus population is a war or new markets.

Brussels — The Belgian share in the $20,000,000 loan to Germany provided under the Dawes reparation plan, has been fixed at $7,500,000. The government previously had the assurance of subscriptions for $5,000,000 and the balance, it is understood, probably has been found by a number of bankers, whom Premier Theunis called into conference.

Manila—A typhoon that swept over the northern provinces of Luzan island has caused much damage. At Aparria seven natives were drowned and 400 small houses were blown down. Lilloc also suffered heavily. Nearly all its houses were blown down or damaged. The Caguyan river, overflowing its banks, carried away many houses.

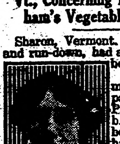
Stockholm — Considerable interest has been aroused here by the large orders for war material placed by several foreign governments with the Bofors Company, Scandinavia's biggest manufacturer of guns, ammunition and military supplies. Less than a month ago, the head of the Bofors concern announced it had contracts for delivery of 10,000,000 kroners' ($2,400,000) worth of war material. A new report from the same company now reveals the placing of another $5,000,000 worth of orders

London — Great Britain sent a sharp note to Turkey demanding evacuation of the Mosul frontier by the Turks. This district was the scene of a recent clash between British and Turkish troops.

Athens—M. Michaleakopoulos, former minister of national economy and at one time Greek delegate of the reparations commission, will organize a new ministry to succeed the cabinet headed by M. Sophoulis, which resigned Wednesday. All the party leaders, with the exception of former Premier Papanastasiou, have promised to support him in the assembly.

HELPED HER IN EVERY WAY

So Writes Mrs. Trombley of Sharon, Vt., Concerning Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound



Sharon, Vermont. — "I was weak and run-down, had a tired feeling and bearing-down pains. I saw an advertisement in the newspaper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and began taking it. It has stopped these bearing-down pains and other bad feelings, and has helped me in every way. I have so much faith in the Vegetable Compound that I keep it on hand all of the time and recommend it whenever I have the opportunity."—Mrs. Lewis Trombley, Sharon, Vermont.

Glad to Help Others

"I had pains in my back and sides for many months, and my work would have to be left undone at those times. My sister told me what good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was doing her, so I tried it, and from the third bottle I was well and every one thought I looked better. I am glad to help others regain their health, and you may use my testimonial." — Mabel Hartmann, 1824 Greene Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y.

You must believe that a medicine that has helped other women will help you. You should try it.

SPOHN'S DISTEMPER COMPOUND

Don't take chances of your horses or mules being laid up with Distemper, Influenza, Pink Eye, Laryngitis, Heaves, Coughs or Colds. Give "SPOHN'S" to both the sick and the well ones. The standard remedy for 30 years. Give "SPOHN'S" for Dog Distemper. 60 cents and $1.20 at drug stores. SPOHN MEDICAL CO. GOSHEN, IND.

Substitute for Glass

A chemical product which resembles glass and can be used for many of the same purposes has been produced in Germany. It can be rolled, bored, polished or cut and does not have the tendency of glass to splinter. Because of this quality it has been recommended for the glass panes of automobiles, optical instruments, ornaments, and toilet articles. Fritz Pollak, the inventor, arrived at this product by condensing carbamide and theocarbamide with formaldehyde. Amides are simple, nitrogenous substances related to proteins.

Stomach Distress?

Waterloo, Iowa.—"My stomach was so bad that almost everything I ate would distress me terribly. Sometimes just a drink of cold water would hurt me. I was hungry and weak. I had constantly a dull pain in my side caused by my liver, and I would get up in the morning with that tired feeling, and had terrible headaches. I surely was a wreck. I had only taken two bottles of the 'Discovery' when I began to feel so much better. I could hardly believe it was myself."—Mrs. Frances A. Pyle, 511½ Sycamore, Apt. 3. All dealers. Tablets or liquid.

Modern America

A woman friend dropped in the other evening to chat with the wife, and was surprised to find the husban, enveloped in an apron, washing the dishes.

"Where's the wife?" the visitor asked cheerily.

"Over at the barber shop," came the grumpy reply.—Indianapolis News.

Have Characteristics of Prehistoric Man

The natives of the island of New Caledonia, which lies in the Pacific ocean several hundred miles east of Australia, have many physical resemblances to the Neanderthal race of prehistoric man, according to reports received at Washington from Prof. Fritz Sarasin, a French anthropologist.

The New Caledonians are regarded as among the lowest and most primitive of savages, a fact that gives additional point to Professor Sarasin's findings. He states that in a few respects they seem to be even more primitive than the long-extinct Neanderthalers, notably in their chinlessness and the simian structure of their noses. In other respects they are less primitive, but in general there is a singular and striking resemblance.—Science Service.

The Villain Foiled!

Bluebeard smiled as he opened the closet door and saw the bodies of his former wives hanging by their gory tresses. Then he snarled as he took a look at his next prospective victim. "Curses!" he screamed. "She's got her hair bobbed!"—American Legion Weekly.

Blue Earth—Fire prevention week started here with the largest fire Blue Earth has had in more than 25 years. The livery barn and adjoining sheds of Frank Bassett were destroyed, causing a loss estimated at $8,000.

Springfield — King Cabbage and Queen Kraut ruled the city of Springfield, and all the countryside turned out to aid in observance of Sauerkraut day, the city's most important festival of the year.

St. Cloud — Many physicians and their wives from the various towns and cities of Minnesota gathered here for the opening of the annual meeting of the Minnesota State Medical Association.

Hibbing — Business men of this city have organized in an effort that will be directed to make Hibbing a great central market, not only for the people who live in "locations" adjacent to the big village, but in the farming districts in a radius of 100 miles.

Willmar — All records of grain inspection in the railway yards here were broken in September. A total of 7,340 cars of grain were sampled here during the month. In the corresponding month a year ago, only 4,774 cars were inspected.

Red Lake Falls — The flax mill of the Fibre Products Company has started the season's operations. P. S. Hillebow, secretary and manager of the company, states that $5 a ton is being paid for clean dry flax straw unbaled.

Owatonna — The day of federal standardized grades in eggs is coming, declared N. M. Borders, assistant in charge of egg marketing problems in the federal department of agriculture, before an audience of southeastern Minnesota egg dealers.

Willmar — The Minnesota, Western Railway, formerly the Luce Line, may add a bus line service from the town of Lake Lillian westward to Clara City, according to reports here. It is reported special trains will be put on to connect with these buses.

Fergus Falls — Hundreds of acres of potatoes in this county will not be dug this fall because of the low price paid for potatoes and the high price of picking. Pickers are getting as high as 30 cents an hour and more in some cases and the potatoes bring only 25 and 30 cents a hundredweight.

Grand Rapids—Work on the new highway between Grand Rapids and Marcell, a part of the county highway which is planned to extend from the range towns, through Grand Rapids, Marcell and Third River to the western border of the county will be completed by November 1.

Madison—The Lac qui Parle county corn crop is going to be a big factor in the prosperity of the county this fall, despite the fact that considerable of it has not matured. Estimates made by men in close touch with the situation place the aggregate yield at 2,000,000 bushels.

Houston — "Thousands of dollars can be saved by farmers if they will get busy now and turn their unfatted hogs into the frosted cornfields and hog down the corn," says G. A. Hundredmark, Houston county farmer, who for 30 years has had experience in farming and hogging down corn.

Buffalo—First butter shipment ever made from Minnesota to London, Eng., left the warehouse of the Minnesota Co-operative Creameries association. It is uniform 94 scale butter and was made by the Buffalo Co-operative creamery at Buffalo, Minn., and the Scandia Co-operative creamery at Scandia, Minn.

Minneapolis—Minnesota's 42,000,000 bushels potato crop, slowly is gaining headway in its march toward the dinner tables of America from Florida to Canada. Already northwest railroads have spent $500,000 getting ready for the potato movement.

Wrenshall—Winfield Holmes of Wrenshall has 40 acres of Green Mountain potatoes pronounced by W. Russell, state potato inspector, to be the best potatoes he has been anywhere in the state for size, uniformity and yield. Three and one-fourth acres yielded at the rate of 335 bushels to the acre of marketable spuds.

WEEKLY MENU SUGGESTIONS

The planning of meals is not always easy. The finding of something all of the family will enjoy and still keep within the limit allowed for food is the daily problem of the housewife.

SUNDAY—Breakfast: Cherries, muffins, bacon. Dinner: Crown roast of lamb with peas. Supper: Whipped cream, cake, blueberries.

MONDAY—Breakfast: Graham gems, ham. Dinner: Broiled sirloin steak, baked potatoes. Supper: Tarts, iced tea.

TUESDAY—Breakfast: Toast, eggs, coffee. Dinner: Baked hash, halves of cantaloupe filled with vanilla ice cream. Supper: Rolls, summer salad of chicken.

WEDNESDAY—Breakfast: Iced watermelon, oatmeal, top milk. Dinner: Veal steak, fricassee of carrots. Supper: Potato salad.

THURSDAY—Breakfast: Prepared breakfast food, milk, corn muffins, coffee. Dinner: Beef stew with vegetables. Supper: Creamed celery, baked.

FRIDAY—Breakfast: Poached eggs on toast, coffee. Dinner: Fried fresh fish, tartar sauce. Supper: Cottage cheese salad.

SATURDAY—Breakfast: Hash, eggs, corn muffins. Dinner: Chuck of beef in casserole. Supper: Rolls, berries, iced lemonade.

Summer Salad of Chicken.

Cut good sized cucumbers into cups and fill with equal parts of chicken and diced cucumbers, season with French dressing to which a little onion juice has been added. Top with a spoonful of mayonnaise and garnish with radishes cut in points.

Fricassee of Carrots.

Steam until tender three or four large carrots. Grate two medium sized onions and brown in one-half cupful of butter, stirring until evenly colored. Cut the carrots into slices and cook them until brown. Dredge the whole with two tablespoonfuls of flour and a teaspoonful of salt with a little pepper. Add a cupful of rich stock, let come to a boil and serve garnished with minced parsley.

Chuck of Beef.

In an iron kettle add the chuck roast, two tablespoonfuls of butter, brown on all sides, add salt and one sliced onion, brown. Place in a casserole with a cupful of stock and such vegetables as one likes. Bake for several hours tightly covered.

Just as of old the world rolls on, and on;
The day dies into night—night into dawn—
Dawn into dusk—through centuries untold—
Just as of old.

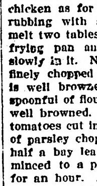
A FEW CREOLE DISHES



Many of the tasty southern dishes though not expensive in themselves, take much time in preparation; however, when prepared, they are well worth the trouble.

La Daube.—La daube is simply a Southern pot roast, yet not as simple as our pot roasts in the North. To make this dish one may use beef or veal, or if for a very choice occasion, turkey, goose or chicken. For a small dinner five pounds of round steak will be sufficient; rump may be used equally well, with one-fourth pound of salt pork sliced very thin, two large onions, three carrots, a turnip, a clove of garlic, parsley cut fine, a bay leaf and a pinch of thyme. Chop one onion, the bay leaf and the parsley very fine. Rub the pork slices with finely minced herbs and spices, then flour the meat all over. Cut the other onion into slices and brown in fat in the bottom of an iron kettle; lay the meat tied in shape over the onion and cover closely. Cook, turning the meat often until it is well-browned on all sides. Lay the vegetables, peeled and sliced about the meat, brown them well, then cover with boiling water, cover closely and simmer for three hours longer. Serve hot or cold.

Poulet Creole.—Cut up a fine, tender chicken as for frying, season well by rubbing with salt and pepper, then melt two tablespoonfuls of butter in a frying pan and brown the chicken slowly in it. Now add one large onion finely chopped and cook until it, too, is well browned, then add one-tablespoonful of flour, and toss until all are well browned. Add two large peeled tomatoes cut into small pieces, a sprig of parsley chopped, a pinch of thyme, half a bay leaf and a clove of garlic minced to a pulp; cover and simmer for an hour. At the end of the time add a cupful of boiling water and three green peppers cut into strips. Cover and simmer again for three-quarters of an hour or until the chicken is very tender. Add seasoning of salt and pepper as needed. Serve with hot, nicely boiled rice.

Pompano With Lemon Butter.—Split the fish, if large, down the back clean and season well by rubbing in plenty of salt and pepper. Brush the hot broiler with olive oil, lay on the fish and broil on both sides until a rich brown. Place on a hot dish, spread with soft butter and squeeze lemon juice over it. Garnish with parsley and sliced lemon. Pompano is a favorite fish in the warm climates

Lying Down to Fly

To lie luxuriously on soft cushions and thus pilot your own small air machine is the latest possibility in aerial flight.

Tiny air-cars are being designed and are to be tested in flight, in which the narrow body, with wings on either side, accommodates just one occupant, lying prone. This will enable the tiny engine to drive the machine more swiftly through the air than would be possible with the air-resistance set up if a body was provided big enough for the pilot to assume the ordinary sitting position.

Perfect comfort will, it is claimed, be assured by a sofalike reclining frame. On this the pilot, enclosed in his miniature machine, will lie face downward, looking outward through a front window or sideways and downward through other little windows.

Two nights a week, the little bungalow at Hollywood and Cahuenga is deserted. Viola is taking esthetic dancing lessons—"to reduce my weight," she explained to Frank.

He was considerably upset, therefore, to stroll into the drug store one night and find Vi getting away with her third chocolate sundae.

"My goodness, how in the deuce do you expect to reduce when you eat a lot of sweet stuff like that?"

"That's just the idea," explained Vi. "If I didn't eat the sweet stuff, I might get thin, and if I got thin, I wouldn't have any excuse for taking the dancing lessons, and I enjoy them so much."—Los Angeles Times.

"Our new-rich multimillionaires are very amusing. The naive way they display their wealth reminds me of little Willie.

"Little Willie was wearing his first pair of pants for the first time. As he played in his father's law office another lawyer dropped in. The two lawyers talked away together, but not a word about the new pants was said.

"Willie stood this as long as he could. Then he said in a careless and indifferent way:

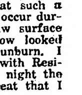
Altitude and the Blood

Dr. Joseph Barcroft of the physiological laboratory of Cambridge university, England, has found that hemoglobin, the red pigment of the blood, increases in quantity as one ascends to higher altitudes. He tells of an English scientist, the hemoglobin content of whose blood was slightly below normal at sea level. He ascended to Cerro de Pasco in the Andes, 14,200 feet above sea level. Four days later it had increased more than 2 per cent. Fourteen days later it had gone up more than 18 per cent.

Skin so sore could not touch water to it

Resinol relieves it within few hours



Washington, D. C., Aug. 25:—"I am so grateful to you for your splendid products and for what they have accomplished for me that I feel I must give you the details.

In attempting to improve the appearance of my chin, I used a soap which had been recommended for that purpose but which proved to be too harsh for when I washed off the lather, the skin came with it. I applied cold cream, but the damage was too severe to yield to so mild an agent. My husband consulted our neighborhood druggist and asked if it would not be advisable to call in our family doctor. The druggist said: "You do not need a doctor in this case. Get a jar of Resinol Ointment and a cake of Resinol Soap and have your wife use them according to directions — they will beat everything else a hundred ways." So my husband bought the Resinol products and hopefully brought them home.

My skin was so tender and sore that I could not touch water to it, so I cleansed it gently first with pure olive oil and then applied the Resinol. I used a soft handkerchief that night for protection. In the morning, I bathed it gently with warm water and Resinol Soap, rinsing off with tepid water, and I could hardly believe that such a miracle of healing could occur during one night. The raw surface had filmed over and now looked only like a bad case of sunburn. I kept my face anointed with Resinol all that day and by night the improvement was so great that I was able to go out.

This experience is now only a memory for my face is softer, fairer and smoother than ever. A jar of Resinol is my best pal in the future and I will never be without it." (Signed) Mrs. C. P. Tapley, 1028 8th St., N. W.

CLIFFORD L. HILTON
Attorney General

St. Paul, Minn., June 14, 1924.

HONORABLE MIKE HOLM,
Secretary of State, Capitol.

SIR: As required by section 46, General Statutes 1913, I have the honor to furnish you herewith a statement of the purposes and effects of all amendments proposed to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by the legislature of 1923 and which are to be submitted to the electors of the state at the general election in 1924.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 1.

Chapter 447, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1923 proposes an amendment to section 5 of article 9 of the constitution of the state. The section now reads as follows:

"Section 5. For the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenditures the state may contract public debts, but such debts shall never, in the aggregate, exceed two hundred and fifty thousand dollars; every such debt shall be authorized by law, for some single object, to be distinctly specified therein; and no such law shall take effect until it shall have been passed by the vote of two-thirds of the members of each branch of the legislature, to be recorded by yeas and nays on the journals of each house respectively, and every such law shall levy a tax annually sufficient to pay the annual interest of such debt and also a tax sufficient to pay the principal of such debt within ten years from the final passage of such law, and shall specially appropriate the proceeds of such taxes to the payment of such principal and interest; and such appropriation and taxes shall not be repealed, postponed, or diminished, until the principal and interest of such debt shall have been wholly paid. The state shall never contract any debts for works of internal improvements, or be a party in carrying on such works, except in cases where grants of land or other property shall have been made to the state, especially dedicated by the grant to specific purposes, and in such cases the state shall devote thereto the avails of such grants, and may pledge or appropriate the revenues derived from such works in aid of their completion."

If amended this section will read as follows:

"Section 5. For the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenditures, the state may contract public debts, but such debts shall never, in the aggregate, exceed two hundred and fifty thousand dollars; every such debt shall be authorized by law, for some single object, to be distinctly specified therein; and no such law shall take effect until it shall have been passed by the vote of two-thirds of the members of each branch of the legislature, to be recorded by yeas and nays on the journals of each house respectively; and every such law shall levy a tax annually sufficient to pay the annual interest of such debt, and also a tax sufficient to pay the principal of such debt within ten years from the final passage of such law, and shall specially appropriate the proceeds of such taxes to the payment of such principal and interest; and such appropriation and taxes shall not be repealed, postponed, or diminished, until the principal and interest of such debt shall have been wholly paid. The state shall never contract any debts for works of internal improvement, or be a party in carrying on such works, except as authorized by section 16 of article 9, and by article 16 of this constitution; but it may levy an excise tax upon any substance, material, fluid, force or other means or instrumentality, or the business of dealing in, selling or producing any or all thereof, used or useful in producing or generating power for propelling motor or other vehicles used on the public highways of this state, and shall place the proceeds of such tax in the trunk highway fund provided for in section 2 of said article 16 and further except in cases where grants of land or other property shall have been made to the state, especially dedicated by the grant to specific purposes, and in such cases the state shall devote thereto the avails of such grants, and may pledge or appropriate the revenues derived from such works in aid of their completion."

The purpose of the proposed amendment is to confer express authority upon the legislature to provide a special tax on gasoline or other substances used, or useful, for the propulsion of motor vehicles on the public highways of the state or on the business of dealing in, selling or producing such substances. The money so raised by such tax to be used for the construction and maintenance of trunk highways.

The effect of the amendment, if adopted, will be that the cost of the construction and maintenance of trunk highways, the whole of which is now paid by a direct tax on motor vehicles, supplemented by federal aid, will be borne in part by the revenue derived from such gasoline tax, so-called, as the legislature may impose.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 2.

Chapter 448, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1923 proposes an amendment of section 36 of article 4 of the constitution of the state. This section now reads as follows:

"Section 36. Any city or village in this state may frame a charter for its own government as a city consistent with and subject to the laws of this state, as follows: The legislature shall provide, under such restrictions as it deems proper, for a board of fifteen freeholders, who shall be and for the past five years shall have been qualified voters thereof, to be appointed by the district judges of the judicial district in which the city or village is situated, as the legislature may determine, for a term in no event to exceed six years, which board shall, within six months after its appointment, return to the chief magistrate of said city or village a draft of said charter, signed by the members of said board, or a majority thereof. Such charter shall be submitted to the qualified voters of such city or village at the next election thereafter, and if four-sevenths of the qualified voters voting at such election shall ratify the same it shall, at the end of thirty days thereafter, become the charter of such city or village as a city, and supersede any existing charter and amendments thereof; Provided, that in cities having patrol limits now established such charter shall require a three-fourths majority vote of the qualified voters voting at such election to change the patrol limits now established. Before any city shall incorporate under this act the legislature shall prescribe by law the general limits within which such charter shall be framed. Duplicate certificates shall be made setting forth the charter proposed and its ratification, which shall be signed by the chief magistrate of said city or village and authenticated by its corporate seal. One of said certificates shall be deposited in the office of the secretary of state, and the other, after being recorded in the office of the register of deeds for the county in which such city or village lies, shall be deposited among the archives of such city or village, and all courts shall take judicial notice thereof. Such charter so deposited may be amended by proposal therefor made by a board of fifteen commissioners aforesaid, published for at least thirty days in three newspapers of general circulation in such city or village, and accepted by three-fifths of the qualified voters of such city or village voting at the next election, and not otherwise; but such charter shall always be in harmony with and subject to the constitution and laws of the state of Minnesota. The legislature may prescribe the duties of the commission relative to submitting amendments of charter to the vote of the people, and shall provide that upon application of five per cent of the legal voters of any such city or village, by written petition, such commission shall submit to the vote of the people proposed amendments to such charter set forth in said petition. The board of freeholders above provided for shall be permanent, and all the vacancies by death, disability to perform duties, resignation or removal from the corporate limits, or expiration of term of office, shall be filled by appointment in the same manner as the original board was created, and said board shall always contain its full complement of members. It shall be a feature of all such charters that there shall be provided, among other things, for a mayor or chief magistrate, and a legislative body of either one or two houses; if of two houses, at least one of them shall be elected by general vote of the electors. In submitting any such charter or amendment thereto to the qualified voters of such city or village any alternate section or article may be presented for the choice of the voters, and may be voted on separately without prejudice to other articles or sections of the charter or any amendments thereto. The legislature may provide general laws relating to affairs of cities, the application of which may be limited to cities of over fifty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of fifty and not less than twenty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of twenty and not less than ten thousand inhabitants, or to cities of ten thousand inhabitants or less, which shall apply equally to all such cities of either class, and which shall be paramount while in force to the provisions relating to the same matter included in the local charter herein provided for. But no local charter, provision or ordinance passed thereunder shall supersede any general law of the state defining or punishing crimes or misdemeanors."

If amended this section will read as follows:

"Section 36. Any city or village in this state may frame a charter for its own government as a city consistent with and subject to the laws of this state, as follows: The legislature shall provide, under such restrictions as it deems proper, for a board of fifteen freeholders, who shall be and for the past five years shall have been qualified voters thereof, to be appointed by the district judges of the judicial district in which the city or village is situated, as the legislature may determine, for a term in no event to exceed six years, which board shall, within six months after its appointment, return to the chief magistrate of said city or village a draft of said charter, signed by the members of said board, or a majority thereof. Such charter shall be submitted to the qualified voters of such city or village at the next election thereafter, and if four-sevenths of the qualified voters voting at such election shall ratify the same it shall, at the end of thirty days thereafter, become the charter of such city or village as a city, and supersede any existing charter and amendments thereof; Provided, that in cities having patrol limits now established, such charter shall require a three-fourths majority vote of the qualified voters voting at such election to change the patrol limits now established. Such charter so deposited may be amended by proposal therefor made by a board of fifteen commissioners aforesaid, published for at least ten days in any daily newspaper of general circulation in such city or village, or if there be no daily newspaper of general circulation in such city or village then for two successive weeks in a weekly newspaper of general circulation in such city or village, and accepted by three-fifths of the qualified voters of such city or village voting at the next election and not otherwise; but such charter shall always be in harmony with and subject to the constitution and laws of the state of Minnesota. The legislature may prescribe the duties of the commission relative to submitting amendments of charter to the vote of the people, and shall provide that upon application of five per cent of the legal voters of any such city or village, by written petition, such commission shall submit to the vote of the people proposed amendments to such charter set forth in said petition. In submitting any such charter or amendment thereto to the qualified voters of such city or village any alternate section or article may be presented for the choice of the voters, and may be voted on separately without prejudice to other articles or sections of the charter or any amendments thereto. The legislature may provide general laws relating to affairs of cities, the applications of which may be limited to cities over fifty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of fifty and not less than twenty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of twenty and not less than ten thousand inhabitants, or to cities of ten thousand inhabitants or less, which shall apply equally to all such cities of either class, and which shall be paramount while in force to the provisions relating to the same matter included in the local charter herein provided for. But no local charter, provision or ordinance passed thereunder shall supersede any general law of the state defining or punishing crimes or misdemeanors."

The purpose of said amendment is to change the number of newspapers in which proposed amendments of home rule charters of cities and villages must be published and the duration of such publications.

The effect of said amendments, if adopted, will be to authorize the publication of proposed amendments to the home rule charter of a city or village for ten days in one daily newspaper of general circulation therein, if there be such a newspaper, or once each week for two successive weeks in a weekly newspaper of general circulation therein, if there be no such daily newspaper, instead of publishing the same for thirty days in three newspapers of general circulation therein as now required.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 3.

Chapter 449 Session Laws Minnesota for the year 1923 proposes an amendment to the constitution of Minnesota by adding thereto a new article, to be known as Article 17, to read as follows:

Article 17.

"Section 1. The legislature by law may establish one state owned public terminal grain elevator at Duluth, Minnesota, and one at Minneapolis, Minnesota, acquired by purchase, lease or exercise of the right of eminent domain, sites and facilities therefor, and provide for the construction, maintenance and operation thereof by the state.

Section 2. The legislature by law may provide for the issue and sale of bonds of the state in such amount as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of Section 1 of this article.

Section 3. Any and all provisions of the constitution of the state of Minnesota inconsistent with the provisions of this article are hereby repealed, so far, but only so far, as the same prohibit or limit the power of the legislature to enact laws authorizing or permitting the doing of the things hereinbefore authorized."

The purpose of said amendment is to expressly empower the legislature to establish, construct, operate and maintain two state owned public terminal elevators.

The effect of said amendment, if adopted, will be to empower the legislature to acquire by purchase, lease or the exercise of the right of eminent domain, sites for one state owned public terminal elevator at Duluth, Minnesota, and another at Minneapolis, Minnesota, to establish, construct, operate and maintain said elevators, to issue and sell bonds of the state in such amount as may be necessary to acquire said sites and to establish, construct, operate and maintain said elevators, and to repeal all provisions of the state constitution inconsistent with said amendment.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 4.

Chapter 450, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1923 proposes an amendment to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by adding thereto a new article, to succeed article 16, and to be appropriately numbered, to read as follows:

Article ....

"Section 1. Laws may be enacted for the purpose of encouraging and promoting forestation and reforestation of lands in this state, whether owned by private persons or the public, including irrepealable provisions for definite and limited taxation of such lands during a term of years, and for a yield tax at or after the end of such term, upon the timber and other forest products so grown.

"Section 2. Any and all provisions of the constitution of the state of Minnesota inconsistent with the provisions of this article, are hereby repealed, so far, but only so far, as the same prohibit or limit the power of the legislature to enact laws authorizing or permitting the doing of the things hereinbefore authorized."

The purpose of said amendment is to empower the legislature to enact laws to encourage and promote forestation and reforestation of publicly and privately owned lands.

The effect of said amendment, if adopted, will be to empower the legislature to enact laws to encourage and promote forestation and reforestation of publicly and privately owned lands, and to that end to enact irrepealable laws for a definite and limited taxation for a term of years of lands devoted to forestation or reforestation, and laws for a yield tax at the end or after such term, upon the timber or other forest products so grown upon said lands, and to repeal provisions of the state constitution inconsistent with said amendment.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 5.

Chapter 451, Session Laws of Minnesota for 1923 proposes an amendment to the constitution of said state by adding thereto a new article, to be known as Article 17 (a), to read as follows:

Article 17 (a).

"Section 1. The state and (or) any of its political subdivisions, if and whenever authorized by the legislature, may contract debts and pledge the public credit for and engage in any work reasonably tending to prevent or abate forest fires, including the compulsory clearing and improvement of wild lands (whether belonging to the public or privately owned) and the assessment against such lands of the value of all benefits so conferred and the payment of damages so sustained in excess of such benefits.

Section 2. Any and all provisions of the constitution of the state of Minnesota inconsistent with the provisions of this article, are hereby repealed, so far, but only so far, as the same prohibit or limit the power of the legislature to enact laws authorizing or permitting the doing of the things hereinbefore authorized."

The purpose of said amendment is to expressly empower the state, and its political subdivisions, to undertake the prevention and abatement of forest fires, and to incur debts and pledge the public credit in so doing.

The effect of said amendment, if adopted, will be to empower the state, and any of its political subdivisions when authorized by the legislature so to do, to engage in any work reasonably tending to prevent or abate forest fires, including the compulsory clearing and improvement of publicly and privately owned wild lands, to assess against said lands the benefits accruing thereto from such work, and to pay the damages to such lands in excess of the benefits, if any resulting from such work, to contract debts and pledge the public credit in carrying on said work, and to repeal all provisions of the state constitution inconsistent with said amendment.

YOU CITIZENS ARE INTERESTED IN POLITICS THIS YEAR BECAUSE you desire a continuation of the present National Administration's policies of tax reduction.

PUBLIC EXPENDITURES OF THE NATION HAVE BEEN REDUCED FROM 5½ billions of dollars annually to less than 3½ billions.

THE NATION'S DEBT HAS BEEN REDUCED BY MORE THAN 1¼ BILLIONS.

NATIONAL CREDIT HAS BEEN RESTORED AS EVIDENCED BY THE fact that Liberty Bonds which, during the preceding (Democratic) administration could be cashed for only about 85 per cent of their face value, are now worth from 100 to 104 per cent of their face value.

NO SUCH RECORD OF FINANCIAL ADJUSTMENT WAS EVER BEFORE made in the history of the world. Its continuation means increased prosperity and happiness for all.

THE REPUBLICAN TICKET IN MINNESOTA STANDS FOUR SQUARE with the principles and aims of the National Administration.

THE MASTERLY KEYNOTE SPEECH OF THEODORE CHRISTIANSON, candidate for Governor, definitely promises a state budget system and consequent reduction of expense to the taxpayer.

ALL REPUBLICAN CANDIDATES ARE OF HIGH CHARACTER AND great ability with records of efficient public service. They believe in our present form of government, agreeing with Charles G. Dawes, Republican Candidate for Vice-President, who recently said:

"THIS CAMPAIGN IS A CONTEST BETWEEN PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATISM AND UNTRIED AND DANGEROUS RADICALISM. LaFOLLETTE, LEADING THE ARMY OF EXTREME RADICALS, HAS A PLATFORM DEMANDING PUBLIC OWNERSHIP OF THE RAILROADS AND ATTACKING OUR COURTS, WHICH ARE A FUNDAMENTAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL SAFEGUARD OF AMERICAN LIBERTIES."

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage containing a Power of Sale, by reason of which default said Power of Sale has become operative, and the Administrator of the Assignee of the Mortgagee hereinafter named is authorized to declare the whole sum due and he hereby does declare said sum due, which mortgage was duly executed by Engebret S. Moe, a single man, Mortgagor, to D. B. Bakke, Mortgagee, dated April 23rd, 1919, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 24th day of April, A. D. 1919, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 93 of Mortgages, on page 259.

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said D. B. Bakke, Mortgagee, to Deposit Bank of Winona, Winona, Minnesota, by written assignment, dated May 17th, 1919, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 24th day of May, A. D. 1919, at 10 o'clock A. M., in Book 86 of Mortgages, on page 270.

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Deposit Bank of Winona, Winona, Minnesota, to Bridget Ryan, by written assignment, dated September 13th, A. D. 1919, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 17th day of September, A. D. 1924, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 110 of Mortgages, on page 324.

And whereas, the said Administrator of the Estate of said Bridget Ryan, the assignee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms of said mortgage and the Power of Sale therein contained; and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice, the sum of Thirty-six Hundred Dollars ($3600.00), with accumulated interest from the 23rd day of April, 1921, at the rate of six per cent per annum; and whereas, the said Power of Sale has become operative and no action or proceedings having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz:

Lots One (1) and Two (2), the Southeast Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (SE¼-SW¼) and the Southwest Quarter of the Southeast Quarter (SW¼SE¼) of Section Twenty-five (25), the Southwest Quarter of the Southeast Quarter (SW¼SE¼) of Section Thirty-three (33), all in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North of Range Forty-two (42) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, and

The North Half of the Southeast Quarter (N½SE¼) and the North Half of the Southwest Quarter (N½SW¼) of Section Thirty-one (31) in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North of Range Forty-one (41) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian containing a total of Three Hundred Thirty-six and 55-100 (336.55) acres more or less according to the United States Government survey thereof, all in Marshall County and State of Minnesota.

Which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the Front door of the County Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State on the 18th day of November, 1924, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the amount then due on said mortgage and interest, together with the costs and disbursements of such sale and Seventy-five Dollars attorneys fees stipulated as attorneys fees in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

Dated September 20, 1924.

JAMES P. TOWEY, as Administrator of the Estate of Bridget Ryan, deceased, the said Bridget Ryan being the Assignee of Mortgagee.

W. J. SMITH,
Attorney for Administrator of the Estate of Bridget Ryan, deceased, the said Bridget Ryan being the Assignee of Mortgagee.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage containing a Power of Sale, by reason of which default said Power of Sale has become operative and the Assignee of the Mortgagee hereinafter named is authorized to declare the whole sum due and he hereby does declare said sum due, which mortgage was executed by Frederick M. Olson, a single man, mortgagor, to J. D. Layton, mortgagee, dated May 21st, 1923, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 4th day of June, 1923, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 115 of Mortgages on page 408.

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said J. D. Layton, Mortgagee, to Clement Kamrowski, by written assignment dated October 23rd, 1923, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 25th day of October, 1923, at 11 o'clock A. M., in Book 115 of Mortgages on page 503.

And whereas, the said Clement Kamrowski, the assignee and holder of said mortgage, has elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the Power of Sale therein contained; and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Fifty-five Hundred ($5500.00) Dollars, with accumulated interest from the 21st day of May, 1923, at the rate of six and one-half per cent per annum; and whereas, the Power of Sale has become operative and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof,

Now, Therefore, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz:

The Northwest Quarter (NW¼) of Section Sixteen (16) in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North, of Range Forty (40) West, of the Fifth Principal Meridian in Minnesota containing One Hundred sixty (160) acres, more or less, according to the United States Government Survey thereof.

Which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the front door of the County Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 28th day of October, at 10 o'clock A. M., of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the amount then due on said mortgage and interest and all delinquent taxes, if any, on said premises, together with the costs and disbursements of such sale and Seventy-five Dollars, as the statutory attorney's fees stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

An Explanation

The wire and sled bunks advertised as being stolen from the Oscar Hanson farm last week, were found by Mr. Rustad in a barn on the vacant River farm, except one roll which Henry Werner found in the road on his way from Holt and took home with him. Mr. Werner found the rest of the wire and sled bunks in the vacant barn on Thursday, while hunting for his calves, and he sent in word to the printing office by Harvey Copp. Mr. Rustad states he did not start the false rumors that have been circulated. Mr. Werner was never held as being guilty of stealing the wire, and did his part as one should in trying to restore it to its rightful owner.

Valuable Hints to Patrons
Delivering Cream to our Creamery

Pasteurization is very important, yet to have it done in an inefficient way is worse than not at all. In view of the fact we ask the cooperation and urge upon all patrons to try and do their share to help us. First— You must try and bring a 1st grade cream and have same delivered in the forenoon if possible. Second— Help us to get our average test 30 per cent or better. Sweet cream can be pasteurized more efficiently than sour, and high testing cream will save you more money for the reason that with a low testing cream it is impossible to churn it without considerable butterfat being drained out with the buttermilk.

STATE OF MINNESOTA
Legal Department
CLIFFORD L. HILTON
Attorney General

St. Paul, Minn., June 14, 1924.

HONORABLE MIKE HOLM,
Secretary of State, Capitol.

SIR: As required by section 46, General Statutes 1913, I have the honor to furnish you herewith, a statement of the purposes and effects of all amendments proposed to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by the legislature of 1923 and which are to be submitted to the electors of the state at the general election in 1924.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 1.

Chapter 447, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1923 proposes an amendment to section 5 of article 9 of the constitution of the state. The section now reads as follows:

"Section 5. For the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenditures, the state may contract public debts, but such debts shall never, in the aggregate, exceed two hundred and fifty thousand dollars; every such debt shall be authorized by law, for some single object, to be distinctly specified therein; and no such law shall take effect until it shall have been passed by the vote of two-thirds of the members of each branch of the legislature, to be recorded by yeas and nays on the journals of each house respectively; and every such law shall levy a tax annually sufficient to pay the annual interest of such debt, and also a tax sufficient to pay the principal of such debt within ten years from the final passage of such law, and shall specially appropriate the proceeds of such taxes to the payment of such principal and interest; and such appropriation and taxes shall not be repealed, postponed, or diminished, until the principal and interest of such debt shall have been wholly paid. The state shall never contract any debts for works of internal improvements, or be a party in carrying on such works, except in cases where grants of land or other property shall have been made to the state, especially dedicated by the grant to specific purposes, and in such cases the state shall devote thereto the avails of such grants, and may pledge or appropriate the revenues derived from such works in aid of their completion."

If amended this section will read as follows:

"Section 5. For the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenditures, the state may contract public debts, but such debts shall never, in the aggregate, exceed two hundred and fifty thousand dollars; every such debt shall be authorized by law, for some single object, to be distinctly specified therein; and no such law shall take effect until it shall have been passed by the vote of two-thirds of the members of each branch of the legislature, to be recorded by yeas and nays on the journals of each house respectively; and every such law shall levy a tax annually sufficient to pay the annual interest of such debt, and also a tax sufficient to pay the principal of such debt within ten years from the final passage of such law, and shall specially appropriate the proceeds of such taxes to the payment of such principal and interest; and such appropriation and taxes shall not be repealed, postponed, or diminished, until the principal and interest of such debt shall have been wholly paid. The state shall never contract any debts for works of internal improvement, or be a party in carrying on such works, except as authorized by section 16 of article 9, and by article 16 of this constitution; but it may levy an excise tax upon any substance, material, fluid, force or other means or instrumentality, or the business of dealing in, selling or producing any or all thereof, used or useful in producing or generating power for propelling motor or other vehicles used on the public highways of this state, and shall place the proceeds of such tax in the trunk highway fund provided for in section 2 of said article 16 and further except in cases where grants of land or other property shall have been made to the state, especially dedicated by the grant to specific purposes, and in such cases the state shall devote thereto the avails of such grants, and may pledge or appropriate the revenues derived from such works in aid of their completion."

The purpose of the proposed amendment is to confer express authority upon the legislature to provide a special tax on gasoline or other substances used, or useful, for the propulsion of motor vehicles on the public highways of the state or on the business of dealing in, selling or producing such substances. The money so raised by such tax to be used for the construction and maintenance of trunk highways.

The effect of the amendment, if adopted, will be that the cost of the construction and maintenance of trunk highways, the whole of which is now paid by a direct tax on motor vehicles, supplemented by federal aid, will be borne in part by the revenue derived from such gasoline tax, so-called, as the legislature may impose.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 2.

Chapter 448, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1923 proposes an amendment of section 36 of article 4 of the constitution of the state. This section now reads as follows:

"Section 36. Any city or village in this state may frame a charter for its own government as a city consistent with and subject to the laws of this state, as follows: The legislature shall provide, under such restrictions as it deems proper, for a board of fifteen freeholders, who shall be and for the past five years shall have been qualified voters thereof, to be appointed by the district judges of the judicial district in which the city or village is situated, as the legislature may determine, for a term in no event to exceed six years, which board shall, within six months after its appointment, return to the chief magistrate of said city or village a draft of said charter, signed by the members of said board, or a majority thereof. Such charter shall be submitted to the qualified voters of such city or village at the next election thereafter, and if four-sevenths of the qualified voters voting at such election shall ratify the same it shall, at the end of thirty days thereafter, become the charter of such city or village as a city, and supersede any existing charter and amendments thereof; Provided, that in cities having patrol limits now established, such charter shall require a three-fourths majority vote of the qualified voters voting at such election to change the patrol limits now established. Before any city shall incorporate under this act the legislature shall prescribe by law the general limits within which such charter shall be framed. Duplicate certificates shall be made setting forth the charter proposed and its ratification, which shall be signed by the chief magistrate of said city or village and authenticated by its corporate seal. One of said certificates shall be deposited in the office of the secretary of state, and the other, after being recorded in the office of the register of deeds for the county in which such city or village lies, shall be deposited among the archives of such city or village, and all courts shall take judicial notice thereof. Such charter so deposited may be amended by proposal therefor made by a board of fifteen commissioners aforesaid, published for at least thirty days in three newspapers of general circulation in such city or village, and accepted by three-fifths of the qualified voters of such city or village voting at the next election and not otherwise; but such charter shall always be in harmony with and subject to the constitution and laws of the state of Minnesota. The legislature may prescribe the duties of the commission relative to submitting amendments of charter to the vote of the people, and shall provide that upon application of five per cent of the legal voters of any such city or village, by written petition, such commission shall submit to the vote of the people proposed amendments to such charter set forth in said petition. The board of freeholders above provided for shall be permanent, and all the vacancies by death, disability to perform duties, resignation or removal from the corporate limits, or expiration of term of office, shall be filled by appointment in the same manner as the original board was created, and said board shall always contain its full complement of members. It shall be a feature of all such charters that there shall be provided, among other things, for a mayor or chief magistrate, and a legislative body of either one or two houses; if of two houses, at least one of them shall be elected by general vote of the electors. In submitting any such charter or amendment thereto to the qualified voters of such city or village any alternate section or article may be presented for the choice of the voters, and may be voted on separately without prejudice to other articles or sections of the charter or any amendments thereto. The legislature may provide general laws relating to affairs of cities, the application of which may be limited to cities of over fifty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of fifty and not less than twenty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of twenty and not less than ten thousand inhabitants, or to cities of ten thousand inhabitants or less, which shall apply equally to all such cities of either class, and which shall be paramount while in force to the provisions relating to the same matter included in the local charter herein provided for. But no local charter, provision or ordinance passed thereunder shall supersede any general law of the state defining or punishing crimes or misdemeanors."

If amended this section will read as follows:

"Section 36. Any city or village in this state may frame a charter for its own government as a city consistent with and subject to the laws of this state, as follows: The legislature shall provide, under such restrictions as it deems proper, for a board of fifteen freeholders, who shall be and for the past five years shall have been qualified voters thereof, to be appointed by the district judges of the judicial district in which the city or village is situated, as the legislature may determine, for a term in no event to exceed six years, which board shall, within six months after its appointment, return to the chief magistrate of said city or village a draft of said charter, signed by the members of said board, or a majority thereof. Such charter shall be submitted to the qualified voters of such city or village at the next election thereafter, and if four-sevenths of the qualified voters voting at such election shall ratify the same it shall, at the end of thirty days thereafter, become the charter of such city or village as a city, and supersede any existing charter and amendments thereof; Provided, that in cities having patrol limits now established, such charter shall require a three-fourths majority vote of the qualified voters voting at such election to change the patrol limits now established. Before any city shall incorporate under this act the legislature shall prescribe by law the general limits within which such charter shall be framed. Duplicate certificates shall be made setting forth the charter proposed and its ratification, which shall be signed by the chief magistrate of said city or village and authenticated by its corporate seal. One of said certificates shall be deposited in the office of the secretary of state, and the other, after being recorded in the office of the register of deeds for the county in which such city or village lies, shall be deposited among the archives of such city or village, and all courts shall take judicial notice thereof. Such charter so deposited may be amended by proposal therefor made by a board of fifteen commissioners aforesaid, published for at least ten days in any daily newspaper of general circulation in such city or village, or if there be no daily newspaper of general circulation in such city or village then for two successive weeks in a weekly newspaper of general circulation in such city or village, and accepted by three-fifths of the qualified voters of such city or village voting at the next election and not otherwise; but such charter shall always be in harmony with and subject to the constitution and laws of the state of Minnesota. The legislature may prescribe the duties of the commission relative to submitting amendments of charter to the vote of the people, and shall provide that upon application of five per cent of the legal voters of any such city or village, by written petition, such commission shall submit to the vote of the people proposed amendments to such charter set forth in said petition. The board of freeholders above provided for shall be permanent and all the vacancies by death disability to perform duties, resignation or removal from the corporate limits or expiration of term of office, shall be filled by appointment in the same manner as the original board was created, and said board shall always contain its full complement of members. It shall be a feature of all such charters that there shall be provided, among other things, for a mayor or chief magistrate, and a legislative body of either one or two houses; if of two houses, at least one of them shall be elected by general vote of the electors. In submitting any such charter or amendment thereto to the qualified voters of such city or village any alternate section or article may be presented for the choice of the voters, and may be voted on separately without prejudice to other articles or sections of the charter or any amendments thereto. The legislature may provide general laws relating to affairs of cities, the applications of which may be limited to cities over fifty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of fifty and not less than twenty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of twenty and not less than ten thousand inhabitants, or to cities of ten thousand inhabitants or less, which shall apply equally to all such cities of either class, and which shall be paramount while in force to the provisions relating to the same matter included in the local charter herein provided for. But no local charter, provision or ordinance passed thereunder shall supersede any general law of the state defining or punishing crimes or misdemeanors."

The purpose of said amendment is to change the number of newspapers in which proposed amendments of home rule charters of cities and villages must be published and the duration of such publications.

The effect of said amendments, if adopted, will be to authorize the publication of proposed amendments to the home rule charter of a city or village for ten days in one daily newspaper of general circulation therein, if there be such a newspaper, or once each week for two successive weeks in a weekly newspaper of general circulation therein, if there be no such daily newspaper, instead of publishing the same for thirty days in three newspapers of general circulation therein as now required.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 3.

Chapter 449 Session Laws Minnesota for the year 1923 proposes an amendment to the constitution of Minnesota by adding thereto a new article, to be known as Article 17, to read as follows:

Article 17.

"Section 1. The legislature by law may establish one state owned public terminal grain elevator at Duluth, Minnesota, and one at Minneapolis, Minnesota, acquired by purchase, lease or exercise of the right of eminent domain, sites and facilities therefor, and provide for the construction, maintenance and operation thereof by the state.

Section 2. The legislature by law may provide for the issue and sale of bonds of the state in such amount as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of Section 1 of this article.

Section 3. Any and all provisions of the constitution of the state of Minnesota inconsistent with the provisions of this article are hereby repealed, so far, but only so far, as the same prohibit or limit the power of the legislature to enact laws authorizing or permitting the doing of the things hereinbefore authorized."

The purpose of said amendment is to expressly empower the legislature to establish, construct, operate and maintain two state owned public terminal elevators.

The effect of said amendment, if adopted, will be to empower the legislature to acquire by purchase, lease or the exercise of the right of eminent domain, sites for one state owned public terminal elevator at Duluth, Minnesota, and another at Minneapolis, Minnesota, to establish, construct, operate and maintain said elevators, to issue and sell bonds of the state in such amount as may be necessary to acquire said sites and to establish, construct, operate and maintain said elevators, and to repeal all provisions of the state constitution inconsistent with said amendment.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 4.

Chapter 450, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1923 proposes an amendment to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by adding thereto a new article, to succeed article 16, and to be appropriately numbered, to read as follows:

Article ....

"Section 1. Laws may be enacted for the purpose of encouraging and promoting forestation and reforestation of lands in this state, whether owned by private persons or the public, including irrepealable provisions for definite and limited taxation of such lands during a term of years, and for a yield tax at or after the end of such term, upon the timber and other forest products so grown.

"Section 2. Any and all provisions of the constitution of the state of Minnesota inconsistent with the provisions of this article, are hereby repealed, so far, but only so far, as the same prohibit or limit the power of the legislature to enact laws authorizing or permitting the doing of the things hereinbefore authorized."

The purpose of said amendment is to empower the legislature to enact laws to encourage and promote forestation and reforestation of publicly and privately owned lands.

The effect of said amendment, if adopted, will be to empower the legislature to enact laws to encourage and promote forestation and reforestation of publicly and privately owned lands, and to that end to enact irrepealable laws for a definite and limited taxation for a term of years of lands devoted to forestation or reforestation, and laws for a yield tax, at the end or after such term, upon the timber or other forest products so grown upon said lands, and to repeal provisions of the state constitution inconsistent with said amendment.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 5.

Chapter 451, Session Laws of Minnesota for 1923 proposes an amendment to the constitution of said state by adding thereto a new article, to be known as Article 17 (a), to read as follows:

Article 17 (a).

"Section 1. The state and (or) any of its political subdivisions, if and whenever authorized by the legislature, may contract debts and pledge the public credit for and engage in any work reasonably tending to prevent or abate forest fires, including the compulsory clearing and improvement of wild lands (whether belonging to the public or privately owned) and the assessment against such lands of the value of all benefits so conferred and the payment of damages so sustained in excess of such benefits.

Section 2. Any and all provisions of the constitution of the state of Minnesota inconsistent with the provisions of this article, are hereby repealed, so far, but only so far, as the same prohibit or limit the power of the legislature to enact laws authorizing or permitting the doing of the things hereinbefore authorized."

The purpose of said amendment is to expressly empower the state, and its political subdivisions, to undertake the prevention and abatement of forest fires, and to incur debts and pledge the public credit in so doing.

The effect of said amendment, if adopted, will be to empower the state and any of its political subdivisions when authorized by the legislature so to do, to engage in any work reasonably tending to prevent or abate forest fires, including the compulsory clearing and improvement of publicly and privately owned wild lands, to assess against said lands the benefits accruing thereto from such work, and to pay the damages to such lands in excess of the benefits, if any resulting from such work, to contract debts and pledge the public credit in carrying on said work, and to repeal all provisions of the state constitution inconsistent with said amendment.

Yours respectfully,
CLIFFORD L. HILTON,
Attorney General.

YOU CITIZENS ARE INTERESTED IN POLITICS THIS YEAR BECAUSE you desire a continuation of the present National Administration's policies of tax reduction.

PUBLIC EXPENDITURES OF THE NATION HAVE BEEN REDUCED FROM 5½ billions of dollars annually to less than 3½ billions.

THE NATION'S DEBT HAS BEEN REDUCED BY MORE THAN 1¼ BILLIONS.

NATIONAL CREDIT HAS BEEN RESTORED AS EVIDENCED BY THE fact that Liberty Bonds which, during the preceding (Democratic) administration could be cashed for only about 85 per cent of their face value, are now worth from 100 to 104 per cent of their face value.

NO SUCH RECORD OF FINANCIAL ADJUSTMENT WAS EVER BEFORE made in the history of the world. Its continuation means increased prosperity and happiness for all.

THE REPUBLICAN TICKET IN MINNESOTA STANDS FOUR SQUARE with the principles and aims of the National Administration.

THE MASTERLY KEYNOTE SPEECH OF THEODORE CHRISTIANSON, candidate for Governor, definitely promises a state budget system and consequent reduction of expense to the taxpayer.

ALL REPUBLICAN CANDIDATES ARE OF HIGH CHARACTER AND great ability with records of efficient public service. They believe in our present form of government, agreeing with Charles G. Dawes, Republican Candidate for Vice-President, who recently said:

"THIS CAMPAIGN IS A CONTEST BETWEEN PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATISM AND UNTRIED AND DANGEROUS RADICALISM. LaFOLLETTE, LEADING THE ARMY OF EXTREME RADICALS, HAS A PLATFORM DEMANDING PUBLIC OWNERSHIP OF THE RAILROADS AND ATTACKING OUR COURTS, WHICH ARE A FUNDAMENTAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL SAFEGUARD OF AMERICAN LIBERTIES."

THE FARMER-LABOR PARTY IN STATE AND NATION IS FOR MORE paternalism in government; paternalism has always meant more state commissions and bureaus, a longer army of state employes, more expense and higher taxes. This effort to socialize the state is well organized and financed. You, right thinking citizens, are against it, opposing, as you do, any tendency toward the Russian system and realizing, as you do, that it has no place in the American scheme of things.

TALK TO YOUR FRIENDS. MAKE SUGGESTIONS TO THE COMMITTEE. This is your fight. Contribute your time or your money—or both. The more [illegible] we have the more we can circulate the truths of the situation and about the [illegible] for progressive, intelligent economy and against any compromise with that [illegible] and Radicalism which is the worst form of Reaction.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage containing a Power of Sale, by reason of which default said Power of Sale has become operative, and the Administrator of the Assignee of the Mortgagee hereinafter named is authorized to declare the whole sum due and he hereby does declare said sum due, which mortgage was duly executed by Engebret S. Moe, a single man, Mortgagor, to D. B. Bakke, Mortgagee, dated April 23rd, 1919, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 25th day of April, A. D. 1919, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 93 of Mortgages, on page 252.

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said D. B. Bakke, Mortgagee, to Deposit Bank of Winona, Winona, Minnesota, by written assignment, dated May 17th 1919, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 24th day of May, A. D. 1919, at 10 o'clock A. M., in Book 86 of Mortgages, on page 270.

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Deposit Bank of Winona, Winona, Minnesota, to Bridget Ryan, by written assignment, dated September 13th, A. D. 1919 and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 17th day of September, A. D. 1924, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 110 of Mortgages, on page 324.

And whereas, the said Administrator of the Estate of said Bridget Ryan, the assignee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms of said mortgage and the Power of Sale therein contained; and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice, the sum of Thirty-six Hundred Dollars ($3600.00), with accumulated interest from the 23rd day of April, 1921, at the rate of six per cent per annum; and whereas, the said Power of Sale has become operative and no action or proceedings having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

NOW THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz:

Lots One (1) and Two (2) the Southeast Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (SE¼SW¼) and the Southwest Quarter of the Southeast Quarter (SW¼SE¼) of Section Twenty-five (25), the Southwest Quarter of the Southeast Quarter (SW¼SE¼) of Section Thirty-three (33), all in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North of Range Forty-two (42) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian and,

The North Half of the Southeast Quarter (N½SE¼) and the North Half of the Southwest Quarter (N½SW¼) of Section Thirty-one (31) in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North of Range Forty-one (41) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, containing a total of Three Hundred Thirty-six and 55-100 (336.55) acres more or less according to the United States Government survey thereof, all in Marshall County and State of Minnesota.

Which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County at the Front door of the County Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State on the 18th day of November, 1924, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the amount then due on said mortgage and interest, together with the costs and disbursements of such sale and Seventy-five Dollars attorneys fees stipulated as attorneys fees in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

Dated September 20, 1924.

JAMES P. TOWEY as Administrator of the Estate of Bridget Ryan, deceased, the said Bridget Ryan being the Assignee of Mortgagee.

SMITH,
Attorney for Administrator of the Estate of Bridget Ryan deceased, the said Bridget Ryan being the Assignee of Mortgagee.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage containing a Power of Sale, by reason of which default said Power of Sale has become operative and the Assignee of the Mortgagee hereinafter named is authorized to declare the whole sum due and he hereby does declare said sum due, which mortgage was executed by Frederick M. Olson, a single man, mortgagor, to J. D. Layton, mortgagee, dated May 21st, 1923, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 4th day of June, 1923, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 115 of Mortgages on page 493.

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said J. D. Layton, Mortgagee, to Clement Kamrowski, by written assignment dated October 23rd, 1923, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 25th day of October, 1923, at 11 o'clock A. M., in Book 115 of Mortgages on page 593.

And whereas, the said Clement Kamrowski, the assignee and holder of said mortgage, has elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the Power of Sale therein contained; and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Fifty-five Hundred ($5500.00) Dollars, with accumulated interest from the 21st day of May, 1923, at the rate of six and one-half per cent per annum; and whereas, the Power of Sale has become operative and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof,

Now, Therefore, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz:

The Northwest Quarter (NW¼) of Section Sixteen (16) in township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North of Range Forty (40) West, of the Fifth Principal Meridian in Minnesota containing One Hundred sixty (160) acres, more or less, according to the United States Government Survey thereof.

Which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the front door of the County Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 28th day of October, at 10 o'clock A. M., of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the amount then due on said mortgage and interest and all delinquent taxes if any, on said premises, together with the costs and disbursements of such sale and Seventy-five Dollars, as the statutory attorney's fees stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

An Explanation

The wire and sled bonks advertised as being stolen from the Oscar Hanson farm last week, were found by Mr. Rustad in a barn on the vacant Hiser farm, except one roll which Renie Werner found in the road on his way from Holt and took home with him. Mr. Werner found the rest of the wire and sled bonks in the vacant barn on Thursday, while hunting for his calves, and he sent in word to the printing office by Harvey Copp. Mr. Rustad states he did not start the false rumors that have been circulated. Mr. Werner was never held as being guilty of stealing the wire, and did his part as one should in trying to restore it to its rightful owner.

Valuable Hints to Patrons

Delivering Cream to our Creamery

Pasteurization is very important, yet to have it done in an inefficient way is worse than not at all. In view of the fact we ask the cooperation and urge upon all patrons to try and do their share to help us. First— You must try and bring a 1st grade cream and have same delivered in the forenoon if possible. Second— Help us to get our average test 30 per cent or better. Sweet cream can be pasteurized more efficiently than sour, and high testing cream will save you more money for the reason that with a low testing cream it is impossible to churn it without considerable butterfat being drained out with the buttermilk.

"HE'S A BEAST"

SYNOPSIS. — Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr. John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Joan Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance.

"That scalpel—quick!" he cried.

Joan started and stretched out her hands toward the tray, which gleamed afar off, elusively through a black cloud.

"The one I handed you. Don't stare at me like a fool!"

Joan bent over the tray, putting out one hand to the table to support herself. She was conscious that everything was suspended and that everyone was watching her. In the interminable interval she heard the patient's gasping sighs, as if he was breathing the last wisps of life away.

She fingered the instruments in the tray feebly and nervelessly, and her hands seemed numbed and useless. Her fingers closed on something and brought it out. Then Lancaster's hand closed over hers, tore it away, and flung it back with a splash. Joan's hand dropped to her side, paralyzed by the painful pressure. The next instant Lancaster had the scalpel and whirled swiftly back toward the table, upsetting the bichloride, which lapped over the patient's feet.

The moments went by like hours. At last Joan became aware, through the sudden unraveling of the suspense, that the crux of the operation was over. Her head grew clear again. She saw the assistant surgeons unfastening the artery clamps. The head nurse rose to her feet, not looking at the patient. Joan realized that she was crying, and her strong, epicene face looked grotesque in grief. The orderly came up, and together they placed the patient on the stretcher. And suddenly Joan knew that the man was dead.

As the stretcher was wheeled out of the theater Lancaster turned toward his visitors.

"A very successful piece of work," he said. "It's a pity the poor fellow will never know how much I have done for him."

Joan felt the visiting surgeons' disgust at the execrable jest. Lancaster seemed to sense it, too.

"Unfortunately," he continued, "the best of surgeons is not proof against the stupidity of a nurse."

And he turned upon Joan fiercely. "What is your name?" he demanded.

"Miss Wentworth, Doctor Lancaster."

"Well, you're no use here. You're wasting your time. You've killed a man this morning," he bellowed. "If I can't have women about me with rational heads on their shoulders I'll get a gang of Chinese chop suey men. Get out and earn your living as a stenographer or saleslady. That's all your talents are fit for, Miss Wentworth!"

Joan looked at him in amazement. At his first words, at his tone, she had felt the shock of anger in her heart gather itself and leap to meet his own. But his rage frightened her, her head ached, and she was sick from the fumes which still penetrated the theater. She tried to answer him, but could not utter a word and broke into tears instead, sobbing in complete nervous abandonment.

Lancaster turned from her with a wry face. "Well, gentlemen," he said, with an affectation of jovialness, "better luck next time. I'm sorry the operation was not successful, but, after all, the patient's life is not the principal thing. The method was correct, you see, but I did not reckon on an incompetent assistant."

"Put the blame on the anesthetic, Doctor Lancaster," said a white-bearded surgeon, with chivalrous intent. "With a nephritis history operation's useless. Better let them die peacefully."

"I did not quite grasp the technical innovation you spoke of, Doctor Lancaster," said another. "To my mind it was the original Leonard operation, except that—"

"Why did you divide the arterial coats below the site of the aneurism?" queried a third.

Lancaster led them from the theater, expostulating and explaining. The dark-haired girl lingered with the sponges. The assistant surgeons had already gone hurriedly out. Joan put her tray away. She still was unable to control her sobs.

Suddenly Lancaster reappeared, furious after the cross-examination to which he had been subjected. He came straight toward Joan with a face of malice. Unconscious of her pitiful aspect as a child might have been, she raised her streaming face and looked at him.

"You had no right to speak to me like that, whatever I did," she said.

"Whatever you did? Whatever you failed to do! What do you think you are here for?" he stormed.

He glared at her, turned away, hesitated, and then came back.

"That's just the way with you women," he cried. "You lost that case for me. And now you are thinking about your dignity. You shouldn't have taken up a nurse's vocation. You women don't know what you can do and what you can't till you find yourselves in a post of responsibility, and then you fall down. What made you take up nursing, anyway Thought our style of caps becoming, I suppose."

"I've done my best to qualify. I've never been blamed before."

"Well, you've made a big mistake," said Lancaster. "That's all. A—very—big—mistake," he added, emphasizing each word with a nod. "And my work and patients' lives are too important to allow mistakes to happen. You're too pretty to be a nurse, anyway," he added in a lower tone.

"You don't need to tell me that, Doctor Lancaster!" cried Joan furiously.

He made a gesture of mock despair.

"That's right; get on your high horse again!" he said. "Just remember that I'm at the head of the Southern hospital, and what I say goes, that's all."

He swung upon his heel and went out of the room, leaving her gripping the table fiercely in her humiliation. The dark-haired girl, who had been fussing in a corner, came up to her.

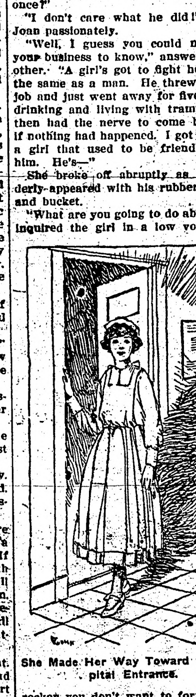
"He's a beast!" she exclaimed passionately. "He hates women—decent women. My! If he'd dared to speak that way to me I'd have told him what I thought of him, right in the middle of the operation. I don't care for anybody when my temper's up. I could tell you a few things I've heard about him if I were minded to. Do you know he went on a five years' spree once?"

"I don't care what he did!" cried Joan passionately.

"Well, I guess you could make it your business to know," answered the other. "A girl's got to fight her way, the same as a man. He threw up his job and just went away for five years, drinking and living with tramps, and then had the nerve to come back as if nothing had happened. I got it from a girl that used to be friendly with him. He's—"

She broke off abruptly as the orderly appeared with his rubber broom and bucket.

"What are you going to do about it?" inquired the girl in a low voice. "I reckon you don't want to forfeit your diploma any more than the rest of us. Listen! You go and see him."



She Made Her Way Toward the Hospital Entrance.

"Never!" said Joan.

"Don't be a fool, Miss Wentworth! You go and see him at his house. It's what anyone would do in your place. Fool him by making him think he can do what he likes with you; play with him and hold him off by hook or crook until you're graduated, and then laugh at him. I'd do it if I had to. My! If you heard some of the stories that are going round—"

The head nurse beckoned at the door. "The lady superintendent wants to see you at once, Miss Wentworth," she said. "You're to go right into her office."

She looked at Joan resentfully. Her face was quite composed again, but her eyes were reddened. She knew that Lancaster had been at fault, but she had seen Joan's blunder, too. Miss Symons was one of those women who can acquire the faculty of a man's strength without losing their own sex. She was a tower of strength toward weakness, but she had no pity for a lapse of duty.

Joan walked the dreary length of the corridor to the lady superintendent's room. The white-haired woman was seated at her desk, pretending to be making up her accounts and composing herself for the interview.

"Miss Wentworth!" she began, turning round in her chair as Joan appeared at the door. "You have made Doctor Lancaster very angry. He said you are totally inefficient. What was it that happened this morning?"

"The ether made me faint and I couldn't see the instruments for a moment, and Doctor Lancaster happened to want a scalpel quickly," answered Joan.

"Well, it's a great pity," said the other, "because it was your first day and we had to get somebody to take Miss Martin's place and I selected you because I relied on you particularly. Anyway, you are suspended."

Joan looked at her stupefied. "You mean—that—I am to leave the hospital and lose my diploma?" she asked.

"I don't know yet," answered the lady superintendent evasively. "I suppose Doctor Lancaster will decide that later after he has laid the matter before the board at their next meeting and looked over your record. Anyway, Miss Wentworth, you may as well take a holiday for a week or so until you hear from us."

She turned back to her books while Joan, after looking at her for a moment in silence, turned and went into the corridor. She made her way toward the hospital entrance. And the great wooden arch, through which she had passed hundreds of times without noticing it, suddenly became vivid with detail; the hospital, which had been a part of her unconscious life, looked strange and new to her.

Chapter II

Joan had a room in a nurses' boarding house a few minutes' walk away. She walked mechanically homeward, hardly even yet realizing the magnitude of the blow which had befallen her. Avonmouth lay almost deserted in the noontide glare. The shuttered houses, gay with striped awnings, looked down on the white, dusty streets. The little park that contained the Confederate monument was bright with geraniums, but the grass was parched and withered, and the feeble efforts of an automatic sprinkler seemed almost instantly absorbed by the thirsty ground.

Joan made her way toward an overhanging tree, brushed away a prickly caterpillar from a seat beneath it, and sat down. She was trying to estimate the magnitude of the catastrophe that had happened to her, to free herself from the stupefied wonder and passionate resentment that held her. Two hours before life had seemed reasonably bright; now its entire course was changed. For she did not doubt that the lady superintendent had been trying to soften the news of her dismissal.

Her mind ran back to the beginning of all things for her—her father's death. That had happened ten years before, and the mortgage on the estate, ruined after the war, had grown like a spreading sore, eating away field after field, until it swallowed everything except nine hundred dollars. After the enforced sale, Mrs. Wentworth and her daughter had gone to Avonmouth for the sole reason that the mother remembered a wealthy godmother there, distantly related, whose activities she hoped to enlist on behalf of her daughter. It was characteristic of her that she should not have known the woman had died six years previously.

Still, Avonmouth was the nearest large town in which a girl, flung on the world untrained, might hope to support two people. Joan had long before wanted to be a nurse. She decided to attempt to enter a hospital; but now her mother's slow, mortal illness kept her nursing her at home. Six months after their arrival Mrs. Wentworth died. What remained of their nine hundred dollars after the doctor's and funeral expenses had been paid would suffice for Joan's merest needs until she had graduated from the Southern hospital. But the physician who attended Mrs. Wentworth in her last illness had secured the girl a position as a probationer, and Joan was as happy as she could expect to be. Since that date he had moved away, and Joan was altogether alone.

At home they had known hardly anyone, for the whole region was in that condition of resettlement that began in the seventies and is still proceeding. Their friends had scattered to the north and west; their letters had long since ceased. Prosperity, stalking through the nation, had left a little ridge of poverty between the swaths of its progress through the foothills of the back country. In Avonmouth Mrs. Wentworth's illness, and afterward, the hospital work, had kept the girl both from making friends and from the realization of her need of them. Her whole mind was set upon obtaining that diploma which would mean an assured living, and before her eyes was ever the spectacle of such poverty as she had known at home among others and had seen approaching her mother. After she graduated, perhaps, life might begin to unfold before her eyes. But even this she realized only vaguely; she lived altogether in the moment.

> It's plain that Joan is a nice girl, but Dr. Lancaster seems to be no good, either as surgeon or man.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Cuckoo Superstitions

There are numerous superstitions associated with the hearing of the cuckoo's first call. In the maritime highlands and Hebrides if the cuckoo is first heard by one who has not broken his fast some misfortune is expected. Indeed, besides the danger, it is considered a reproach to one to have heard the cuckoo while hungry, says the Detroit News.

In France to hear the cuckoo for the first time fasting is to make the hearer "an idle do-nothing for the rest of the year" or "to numb his limbs" for the same period. There is a similar belief in certain parts of the west of England. In Northumberland one is told, if walking on a hard road when the cuckoo first calls, that the ensuing season will be full of calamity. To be on soft ground is a lucky omen.

There are 95 different kinds of brussels sprouts, 120 kinds of lettuce and 194 varieties of carrots.

Big Happenings of the Week Condensed for the Benefit of Busy Readers.

Washington

Washington — President Coolidge, in a Columbus day letter to Vita Contessa, of New York, president of the Italian Benevolent society, paid tribute to Christopher Columbus and to American citizens of Italian birth.

Washington—The Supreme Court refused to review the conviction of R. H. Clements and other former employees of the Santa Fe Railroad on the charge of conspiracy to obstruct the mails and interfere with interstate commerce in the shopmen's strike in 1922.

Washington—Postal receipts in 50 leading cities increased $2,625,615, or 11.28 per cent, in September, as compared with September, 1923, the postoffice department has announced. The total receipts in September were $25,897,728, against $23,272,113, in September, 1923.

Washington—Imminent danger of extinction from starvation this winter of the entire herd of 30,000 mule deer now in the Kaibab game preserve in northern Arizona, has caused a committee appointed by Secretary Wallace to recommend killing of enough of the herd to prevent the death of the remainder. The government has offered to give away the deer and if this does not reduce the herd materially, hunting under proper regulations is suggested. Only about 15,000 deer can be supported by the forage on the area, which is far below normal.

Domestic

San Diego—Two fliers were killed and another narrowly escaped death in an airplane collision over Coronado.

New York—Arrangements for a new Trans-Atlantic cable line between the United States and Germany were reported complete by Clarence Mackay, president of the Commercial Cable Company.

Albany, N. Y.—Wayne B. Wheeler, Antisaloon League general counsel, declared before prohibition there were 25,000,000 regular drinkers, while now there are about 3,000,000 who get 10 times as much publicity.

Springfield, Ill.—Quick action by John Stamper, superintendent, who, when he saw bandits at Tovey, rushed the mine cage to the depths of the shafts, saved the payroll of $95,000. This was to have been the last cash payday.

New York—Bandits entered the Bronx jewelry store of Sam Goldman, which is within 200 feet of a police station, bound and gagged the jeweler, his daughter, Lili, and Fred Weiss, an accountant, and escaped with $10,000 worth of jewelry.

Chicago—Sheriff Edwin Ahlstrom of Waukegan was fined $250 and costs by Federal Judge Carpenter for removing Marjorie Moberly and Marjorie Dorland from the Lake county jail while they were federal prisoners and taking them to a dance. The girls were witnesses in a government case against two men who were alleged to have brought them from Iowa to Chicago.

New York—A suntanned Canadian voyager came unheralded to the barge office at the battery. Forty-two days ago, George H. G. Smyth of Toronto, 33 years old, left Sidney, Cape Breton island, Nova Scotia, in a 15 foot open canoe. He paddled 1,350 miles in salt water and claims to have set a record.

Gloucester, Mass.—Coast guard and customs officers broke up an attempt to run rum simultaneously into several harbors on the north shore, when they seized five boats, with 3,000 gallons of alcohol and a lot of whisky in cases, and arrested nine men. The boats were caught six to eight miles off shore, heading in from the rum row off Cape Ann.

New York—Clarence Darrow, Chicago attorney, referred a debate in which Morris Hillquist, Socialist leader, supported the presidential candidacy of Robert M. LaFollette, and Samuel Untermeyer, New York attorney, upheld the merits fo John W. Davis, democratic candidate. Darrow announced he did not care who licked President Coolidge, and expressed dissatisfaction with the debate because of no mention of "heavy wines and beer."

Lansing, Mich.—The final brief in the appeal of Charles E. Ruthenberg, Community Party of America leader, who was convicted of violation of the Michigan syndicalism act, was filed for the state in the supreme court by O. L. Smith, assistant attorney general. It asked the court to affirm Ruthenberg's conviction. The case probably will be argued in the current term of court.

Boise, Idaho—Voicing the first public protest against the Idaho law which prohibits women from serving on juries, the Eden Civic Club has adopted a resolution urging Idaho women to work for repeal of any law that places women of the United States in a position of inferiority.

Chicago—Judge John R. Caverly, who sentenced Nathan Leopold, Jr., and Richard Loeb to life imprisonment, for the killing of Robert Franks, returned to the bench after several weeks in a hospital recuperating from the nervous strain brought on by the case.

Chicago — Charles L. Hutchinson, founder and president of the Chicago Art Institute, vice president of the Corn Exchange National bank and philanthropist, died at a hospital here after a short illness.

Sports

Washington—Epinard, noted French race horse that was defeated in three international specials on American tracks, will be shipped to New York, to sail for France within a fortnight. In making this announcement, Eugene Leigh, his trainer, explained that Epinard came out of the Laurel race with a cracked quarter that precludes him from going to the post again this year.

Urbana, Ill.—A flashing, red-haired youngster, running and dodging with the speed of a deer, gave 67,000 spectators jammed into the new $1,700,000 Illinois memorial stadium the thrill of their lives, when Illinois vanquished Michigan, 39 to 14. Individually, Grange scored five of Illinois' six touchdowns in a manner that left no doubt as to his ability to break through the most perfect defense.

Madison, Wis.—Coming from behind with a whirlwind rush, the Gophers, fighting with a spirit that would not be denied, emerged from the shadows of defeat and battled their way into a 7 to 7 tie with Wisconsin in the thirty-fourth annual football game between these two ancient rivals of the gridiron. Twenty-five thousand rooters, many of them from Minnesota, looked on and roared their approval as the Gophers and Badgers fought furiously for victory.

Foreign

San Salvador—General Ferrera, Honduran revolutionary leader, has been defeated by the government forces and is fleeing from the country, advices from Tegucigalpa said.

London—Thirty-nine women candidates already are in the field for election to the house of commons at the forthcoming general election. Only 34 women ran in the last election.

Rome—Newspapers confirmed the engagement of Crown Prince Humbert of Italy and Princess Marie José, daughter of the Belgian king and queen.

Mexico City—A Laredo-Mexico City passenger train was wrecked by bandits, who killed the engineer, fireman and two soldiers of the escort, pillaged an express car and robbed the passengers.

London—Mme. Galli-Curci, the singer was given a tumultuous reception at her first concert here. The seats in vast Albert hall were sold out weeks ago, and thousands of persons struggled vainly to obtain admittance to hear the noted soprano.

Paris—Mme. Anatole France notified the government that she wished no religious ceremony whatever over the body of her husband. She asserted that he died in full consciousness, declaring he wished no religious comforts at the deathbed or religious observances afterwards.

Christiania — Whaling operations have revived to such an extent that several new companies have been organized here to deal in whale oil. A company recently capitalized for 3,000,000 kronen, is building several vessels with devices which will allow the whales to be brought on deck for the work of stripping blubber.

Paris—Jean "Three star" Hennessy, multimillionaire socialist, will enter the diplomatic service as French minister to Switzerland, it is announced. Mr. Hennessy is a liquor manufacturer, one of the richest men on the continent of Europe, and one of the reddest of French socialists. He contributed large portions of the campaign funds which swept M. Poincare out and Premier Herriot in.

Vladivostok—The Russian armored transport Red October, which was recently sent to Wrangell island to claim that bit of land for soviet Russia, is expected to arrive here shortly with the bodies of members of Stefanson's Karluk expedition, which were found on Herald island, east of Wrangell. The Karluk, an exploration ship, went down in the ice 60 miles north of Herald island in 1914.

Berlin—The German winners of the peace-plan award offered by Edward A. Filene of Boston, have been announced. The first prize of $5,000 is divided between Dr. Eduard David of Darmstadt, socialist reichstag member and former member of the interior, and Dr. Wilhelm Riedner of Solln, near Munich. The second prize of $1,500 went to Dr. Gustav Jodleder of Berlin. The third prize was divided among 35 contestants, each receiving $100.

Paris—An Italian, Signor Callizio, wins the world's altitude record in an airplane by his flight of 12,660 meters. The flight orginally was made under conditions which deranged the instruments to such an extent that the flight was declared slightly under the world's record, held by the French aviator, Sadi LeCointe. When a second examination was completed by instruments in the national laboratory, however, it was clearly shown that Signor Callizio had the record. Sadi LeCointe immediately announced that he would try for a new record.

Vienna—Jackie Coogan arrived in Budapest. Thousands greeted him at the station. He was escorted by police to his hotel. He intends to stay here two days and then to Berlin four days.

Dublin—Two clerks in the American consulate were charged in the Dublin police court with conspiracy to obtain $36 from a man named Sillott. It appeared that the man, who is apparently an intending emigrant to America, was anxious to have his application for a vise expedited and was willing to give what the defendants' solicitor called a tip.

NORTH DAKOTANS FACE BEST TIMES

So Says Eastern Publication In Tribute to State Booster Association

Fargo, N. D.—North Dakota is destined for a much greater prosperity than it has yet known, is the opinion contained in an editorial entitled "Truth Boosters," which appears in the current issue of the Country Gentleman.

The article pays a tribute to the aims of the Greater North Dakota association as follows:

"Some of the prominent people of North Dakota have organized themselves into what they call The Greater North Dakota association, with headquarters in Valley City.

"The expressed object of this association is to proclaim to the world the truth about North Dakota. They feel that the good name of the state has been much maligned.

"For years the eyes of the rest of the country were fixed upon the political happenings in that state. Then came stories of bank failures, of crop failures and of agricultural distress. For ten years the state has suffered. It has been discredited.

"But through all those years of political strife no one—not even the people themselves—took the trouble to tell the rest of the country about the many good things that North Dakota possesses—its wonderful soil, its industrious people, its good climate, its empire of cheap land. Now it is making great strides in diversified farming and it is not burdened by crushing debt.

"North Dakota is destined for a much greater prosperity than it has yet known. If this new association will simply tell the truth about the state without bombast and without exaggeration it can render a most valuable service."

PLAN FOR BAD LANDS PARK

Will Raise Funds to Present Bill Before Congress.

Fargo, N. D.—Need for action on getting the proposed Roosevelt National park bill before congress, was discussed by A. H. Yoeder, of Grand Forks, vice president of the Memorial National Park association at a meeting of the Lions club, held at Fargo recently.

It is estimated that the cost of the new park will be about $10,000. Each county will be asked to contribute a certain amount, the amount for Cass county, being $525. Plans are being made to have all schools, clubs, lodges, and other organizations in the different counties contribute to this fund.

The park, to be located in the Badlands, according to plans, would be about midway between the Minnesota lake regions and Yellowstone, Glacier, and other western parks.

Seven other states have bills before congress asking for parks with the name Roosevelt connected. Although North Dakota claims more right to the name Roosevelt than any other state, she will have to act immediately or lose her chance.

Surveys and maps of every parcel of land in the proposed park must be made before the bill can be presented to congress.

The drive for funds will begin next week.

GIRL WIVES MUST ATTEND

Threatens Husbands With Jail Sentence If Law Is Evaded.

Chicago.—William L. Bodine, superintendent of compulsory education, decreed Monday that men who were married to girls 16 years of age or younger must go to jail of they do not keep their wives in school. His order resulted from publicity given to the cases of two girls, both 15, who had married with the avowed intention of escaping school by so doing.

"All brides under 16 must attend school, and their husbands will be arrested if they do not keep their wives of compulsory school age in regular attendance," said Mr. Bodine.

His statement instructs truant officers to take drastic action against husbands and parents who perjure a child in premature marriage under legal age.

"Some men," he declared, "who returned from adjacent states where they married 12-year-old girls, have been arrested for the delinquency of minors when they lived as man and wife here. The school ages impeached the false ages given at out of town license bureaus. 'Marrying parsons' and justices of the peace have been reaping a harvest of dollars in marrying couples who appear before them, regardless of their actual ages."

NERVOUS & HALF-SICK WOMEN

Relieved by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

These Three Letters Prove It

Lowell, Mass.—"I am sending you a few lines to let you know what good your medicine has done for me. I want you to let every one know that it has helped me in nervous troubles. I have four children and you know there is a lot to do where children are. They would come in from school and they would start telling me about their little troubles but I could not stand it. I had to send them away. I could not even walk on the street alone I was so nervous. I found one of your books and read it and then I saw in the paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I got it and had taken one bottle when I saw a change in myself. I was surprised. The children can talk all they want to now and it does not bother me. I am still taking the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. JOSEPH LEMERE, 84 South Street, Lowell, Mass.

Felt Like A New Woman

Springfield, Missouri.—"For four or five months I was run-down, nervous, my back ached and I did not feel like doing a thing. Sometimes my legs ached and felt like they would break and I had a hurting in my sides. I had been reading in the newspapers the letters of other women who had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and the advertising of it appealed to me so I bought some and saw results in almost no time. I had hardly been able to do my own work and after taking the Vegetable Compound I felt like a new woman. I recommend it to my friends who have troubles like I did, and hope they will find the same results."—Mrs. M. CARPENTER, 607 W. Chase Street, Springfield, Missouri.

40 Years Old, Feels Like 20

Hagerstown, Md.—"I was very bad off with backache, a bearing-down feeling in my body and a pain in my left side. I could not be on my feet at times and once I was so bad I walked bent over to one side for three weeks. My sister read of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and got me a bottle. I got so much relief that I took more until I was well. I am 40 years old and feel like 20. I am sure this medicine will help all women."—Mrs. MARY E. SANDY, 436 W. Franklin Street, Hagerstown, Md.

Over 100,000 women have so far replied to our question, "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?"

98 per cent of these replies are "Yes."

That means that 98 out of every 100 women who take this medicine for the ailments for which it is recommended are benefited by it.

All druggists are having increased sales of this medicine.

Molasses Drop Cakes.

- ½ cup butter
- ½ cup of boiling water
- 1 cup molasses
- 1 level teaspoon soda
- ½ level teaspoon Calumet Baking Powder
- 1 teaspoon ginger
- 1 teaspoon cinnamon
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- Flour for drop batter

Melt the butter in the boiling water and add the molasses, then other ingredients sifted together. Drop from a spoon onto a greased baking tin, having the cakes some distance apart. Bake in a hot oven, 350 degrees F.

Advice to Suffering Women!

Springfield, Mo.—"I had a nervous breakdown and tried several remedies without getting any permanent benefit from them. I suffered from bloating, chills and terrible headaches. Finally, a lady advised me to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription; I did so, and it overcame the trouble completely and I have enjoyed good health ever since. I advise all suffering women to give the 'Prescription' a fair trial."—Mrs. Bert Faulkner, 2069 Howard Ave.

CLIFFORD L. HILTON
Attorney General

St. Paul, Minn., June 14, 1924.

HONORABLE MIKE HOLM,
Secretary of State, Capitol.

SIR: As required by section 46, General Statutes 1913, I have the honor to furnish you herewith, a statement of the purposes and effects of all amendments proposed to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by the legislature of 1923 and which are to be submitted to the electors of the state at the general election in 1924.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 1.

Chapter 447, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1923 proposes an amendment to section 5 of article 9 of the constitution of the state. The section now reads as follows:

"Section 5. For the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenditures, the state may contract public debts, but such debts shall never, in the aggregate, exceed two hundred and fifty thousand dollars; every such debt shall be authorized by law, for some single object, to be distinctly specified therein; and no such law shall take effect until it shall have been passed by the vote of two-thirds of the members of each branch of the legislature, to be recorded by yeas and nays on the journals of each house respectively; and every such law shall levy a tax annually sufficient to pay the annual interest of such debt, and also a tax sufficient to pay the principal of such debt within ten years from the final passage of such law, and shall specially appropriate the proceeds of such taxes to the payment of such principal and interest; and such appropriation and taxes shall not be repealed, postponed, or diminished, until the principal and interest of such debt shall have been wholly paid. The state shall never contract any debts for works of internal improvements, or be a party in carrying on such works, except in cases where grants of land or other property shall have been made to the state, especially dedicated by the grant to specific purposes, and in such cases the state shall devote thereto the avails of such grants, and may pledge or appropriate the revenues derived from such works in aid of their completion."

If amended this section will read as follows:

"Section 5. For the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenditures, the state may contract public debts, but such debts shall never, in the aggregate, exceed two hundred and fifty thousand dollars; every such debt shall be authorized by law, for some single object, to be distinctly specified therein; and no such law shall take effect until it shall have been passed by the vote of two-thirds of the members of each branch of the legislature, to be recorded by yeas and nays on the journals of each house respectively; and every such law shall levy a tax annually sufficient to pay the annual interest of such debt, and also a tax sufficient to pay the principal of such debt within ten years from the final passage of such law, and shall specially appropriate the proceeds of such taxes to the payment of such principal and interest; and such appropriation and taxes shall not be repealed, postponed, or diminished, until the principal and interest of such debt shall have been wholly paid. The state shall never contract any debts for works of internal improvement, or be a party in carrying on such works, except as authorized by section 16 of article 9, and by article 16 of this constitution; but it may levy an excise tax upon any substance, material, fluid, force or other means or instrumentality, or the business of dealing in, selling or producing any or all thereof, used or useful in producing or generating power for propelling motor or other vehicles used on the public highways of this state, and shall place the proceeds of such tax in the trunk highway fund provided for in section 2 of said article 16 and further except in cases where grants of land or other property shall have been made to the state, especially dedicated by the grant to specific purposes, and in such cases the state shall devote thereto the avails of such grants, and may pledge or appropriate the revenues derived from such works in aid of their completion."

The purpose of the proposed amendment is to confer express authority upon the legislature to provide a special tax on gasoline or other substances used or useful for the propulsion of motor vehicles on the public highways of the state or on the business of dealing in, selling or producing such substances. The money so raised by such tax to be used for the construction and maintenance of trunk highways.

The effect of the amendment, if adopted, will be that the cost of the construction and maintenance of trunk highways, the whole of which is now paid by a direct tax on motor vehicles, supplemented by federal aid, will be borne in part by the revenue derived from such gasoline tax, so-called, as the legislature may impose.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 2.

Chapter 448, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1923 proposes an amendment of section 36 of article 4 of the constitution of the state. This section now reads as follows:

"Section 36. Any city or village in this state may frame a charter for its own government as a city consistent with and subject to the laws of this state, as follows: The legislature shall provide, under such restrictions as it deems proper, for a board of fifteen freeholders, who shall be and for the past five years shall have been qualified voters thereof, to be appointed by the district judges of the judicial district in which the city or village is situated, as the legislature may determine, for a term in no event to exceed six years, which board shall, within six months after its appointment, return to the chief magistrate of said city or village a draft of said charter, signed by the members of said board, or a majority thereof. Such charter shall be submitted to the qualified voters of such city or village at the next election thereafter, and if four-sevenths of the qualified voters voting at such election shall ratify the same it shall, at the end of thirty days thereafter, become the charter of such city or village as a city, and supersede any existing charter and amendments thereof; Provided, that in cities having patrol limits now established, such charter shall require a three-fourths majority vote of the qualified voters voting at such election to change the patrol limits now established. Before any city shall incorporate under this act the legislature shall prescribe by law the general limits within which such charter shall be framed. Duplicate certificates shall be made setting forth the charter proposed and its ratification, which shall be signed by the chief magistrate of said city or village and authenticated by its corporate seal. One of said certificates shall be deposited in the office of the secretary of state, and the other, after being recorded in the office of the register of deeds for the county in which such city or village lies, shall be deposited among the archives of such city or village, and all courts shall take judicial notice thereof. Such charter so deposited may be amended by proposal therefor made by a board of fifteen commissioners aforesaid, published for at least thirty days in three newspapers of general circulation in such city or village, and accepted by three-fifths of the qualified voters of such city or village voting at the next election and not otherwise; but such charter shall always be in harmony with and subject to the constitution and laws of the state of Minnesota. The legislature may prescribe the duties of the commission relative to submitting amendments of charter to the vote of the people, and shall provide that upon application of five per cent of the legal voters of any such city or village, by written petition, such commission shall submit to the vote of the people proposed amendments to such charter set forth in said petition. The board of freeholders above provided for shall be permanent, and all the vacancies by death, disability to perform duties, resignation or removal from the corporate limits, or expiration of term of office, shall be filled by appointment in the same manner as the original board was created, and said board shall always contain its full complement of members. It shall be a feature of all such charters that there shall be provided, among other things, for a mayor or chief magistrate, and a legislative body of either one or two houses; if of two houses, at least one of them shall be elected by general vote of the electors. In submitting any such charter or amendment thereto to the qualified voters of such city or village any alternate section or article may be presented for the choice of the voters, and may be voted on separately without prejudice to other articles or sections of the charter or any amendments thereto. The legislature may provide general laws relating to affairs of cities, the application of which may be limited to cities of over fifty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of fifty and not less than twenty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of twenty and not less than ten thousand inhabitants, or to cities of ten thousand inhabitants or less, which shall apply equally to all such cities of either class, and which shall be paramount while in force to the provisions relating to the same matter included in the local charter herein provided for. But no local charter, provision or ordinance passed thereunder shall supersede any general law of the state defining or punishing crimes or misdemeanors."

If amended this section will read as follows:

"Section 36. Any city or village in this state may frame a charter for its own government as a city consistent with and subject to the laws of this state, as follows: The legislature shall provide, under such restrictions as it deems proper, for a board of fifteen freeholders, who shall be and for the past five years shall have been qualified voters thereof, to be appointed by the district judges of the judicial district, in which the city or village is situated, as the legislature may determine, for a term in no event to exceed six years, which board shall, within six months after its appointment, return to the chief magistrate of said city or village a draft of said charter, signed by the members of said board, or a majority thereof. Such charter shall be submitted to the qualified voters of such city or village at the next election thereafter, and if four-sevenths of the qualified voters voting at such election shall ratify the same it shall, at the end of thirty days thereafter, become the charter of such city or village as a city, and supersede any existing charter and amendments thereof; Provided, that in cities having patrol limits now established, such charter shall require a three-fourths majority vote of the qualified voters voting at such election to change the patrol limits now established. Before any city shall incorporate under this act the legislature shall prescribe by law the general limits within which such charter shall be framed. Duplicate certificates shall be made setting forth the charter proposed and its ratification, which shall be signed by the chief magistrate of said city or village and authenticated by its corporate seal. One of said certificates shall be deposited in the office of the secretary of state, and the other, after being recorded in the office of the register of deeds for the county in which such city or village lies, shall be deposited among the archives of such city or village, and all courts shall take judicial notice thereof. Such charter so deposited may be amended by proposal therefor made by a board of fifteen commissioners aforesaid, published for at least ten days in any daily newspaper of general circulation in such city or village, or if there be no daily newspaper of general circulation in such city or village then for two successive weeks in a weekly newspaper of general circulation in such city or village, and accepted by three-fifths of the qualified voters of such city or village voting at the next election and not otherwise; but such charter shall always be in harmony with and subject to the constitution and laws of the state of Minnesota. The legislature may prescribe the duties of the commission relative to submitting amendments of charter to the vote of the people, and shall provide that upon application of five per cent of the legal voters of any such city or village, by written petition, such commission shall submit to the vote of the people proposed amendments to such charter set forth in said petition. The board of freeholders above provided for shall be permanent and all the vacancies by death, disability to perform duties, resignation or removal from the corporate limits, or expiration of term of office, shall be filled by appointment in the same manner as the original board was created, and said board shall always contain its full complement of members. It shall be a feature of all such charters that there shall be provided, among other things, for a mayor or chief magistrate, and a legislative body of either one or two houses; if of two houses, at least one of them shall be elected by general vote of the electors. In submitting any such charter or amendment thereto to the qualified voters of such city or village any alternate section or article may be presented for the choice of the voters, and may be voted on separately without prejudice to other articles or sections of the charter or any amendments thereto. The legislature may provide general laws relating to affairs of cities, the applications of which may be limited to cities over fifty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of fifty and not less than twenty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of twenty and not less than ten thousand inhabitants, or to cities of ten thousand inhabitants or less, which shall apply equally to all such cities of either class, and which shall be paramount while in force to the provisions relating to the same matter included in the local charter herein provided for. But no local charter, provision or ordinance passed thereunder shall supersede any general law of the state defining or punishing crimes or misdemeanors."

The purpose of said amendment is to change the number of newspapers in which proposed amendments of home rule charters of cities and villages must be published and the duration of such publications.

The effect of said amendments, if adopted, will be to authorize the publication of proposed amendments to the home rule charter of a city or village for ten days in one daily newspaper of general circulation therein, if there be such a newspaper, or once each week for two successive weeks in a weekly newspaper of general circulation therein, if there be no such daily newspaper, instead of publishing the same for thirty days in three newspapers of general circulation therein as now required.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 3.

Chapter 449 Session Laws Minnesota for the year 1923 proposes an amendment to the constitution of Minnesota by adding thereto a new article, to be known as Article 17, to read as follows:

Article 17.

"Section 1. The legislature by law may establish one state owned public terminal grain elevator at Duluth, Minnesota, and one at Minneapolis, Minnesota, acquired by purchase, lease or exercise of the right of eminent domain, sites and facilities therefor, and provide for the construction, maintenance and operation thereof by the state.

Section 2. The legislature by law may provide for the issue and sale of bonds of the state in such amount as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of Section 1 of this article.

Section 3. Any and all provisions of the constitution of the state of Minnesota inconsistent with the provisions of this article are hereby repealed, so far, but only so far, as the same prohibit or limit the power of the legislature to enact laws authorizing or permitting the doing of the things hereinbefore authorized."

The purpose of said amendment is to expressly empower the legislature to establish, construct, operate and maintain two state owned public terminal elevators.

The effect of said amendment, if adopted, will be to empower the legislature to acquire by purchase, lease or the exercise of the right of eminent domain, sites for one state owned public terminal elevator at Duluth, Minnesota, and another at Minneapolis, Minnesota, to establish, construct, operate and maintain said elevators, to issue and sell bonds of the state in such amount as may be necessary to acquire said sites and to establish, construct, operate and maintain said elevators, and to repeal all provisions of the state constitution inconsistent with said amendment.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 4.

Chapter 450, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1923 proposes an amendment to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by adding thereto a new article, to succeed article 16, and to be appropriately numbered, to read as follows:

Article ....

"Section 1. Laws may be enacted for the purpose of encouraging and promoting forestation and reforestation of lands in this state, whether owned by private persons or the public, including irrepealable provisions for definite and limited taxation of such lands during a term of years, and for a yield tax at or after the end of such term, upon the timber and other forest products so grown.

"Section 2. Any and all provisions of the constitution of the state of Minnesota inconsistent with the provisions of this article, are hereby repealed, so far, but only so far, as the same prohibit or limit the power of the legislature to enact laws authorizing or permitting the doing of the things hereinbefore authorized."

The purpose of said amendment is to empower the legislature to enact laws to encourage and promote forestation and reforestation of publicly and privately owned lands.

The effect of said amendment, if adopted, will be to empower the legislature to enact laws to encourage and promote forestation and reforestation of publicly and privately owned lands, and to that end to enact irrepealable laws for a definite and limited taxation for a term of years of lands devoted to forestation or reforestation, and laws for a yield tax at the end or after such term, upon the timber or other forest products so grown upon said lands, and to repeal provisions of the state constitution inconsistent with said amendment.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 5.

Chapter 451, Session Laws of Minnesota for 1923 proposes an amendment to the constitution of said state by adding thereto a new article, to be known as Article 17 (a), to read as follows:

Article 17 (a).

"Section 1. The state and (or) any of its political subdivisions, if and whenever authorized by the legislature, may contract debts and pledge the public credit for and engage in any work reasonably tending to prevent or abate forest fires, including the compulsory clearing and improvement of wild lands (whether belonging to the public or privately owned) and the assessment against such lands of the value of all benefits so conferred and the payment of damages so sustained in excess of such benefits.

Section 2. Any and all provisions of the constitution of the state of Minnesota inconsistent with the provisions of this article, are hereby repealed, so far, but only so far, as the same prohibit or limit the power of the legislature to enact laws authorizing or permitting the doing of the things hereinbefore authorized."

The purpose of said amendment is to expressly empower the state, and its political subdivisions, to undertake the prevention and abatement of forest fires, and to incur debts and pledge the public credit in so doing.

The effect of said amendment, if adopted, will be to empower the state, and any of its political subdivisions when authorized by the legislature so to do, to engage in any work reasonably tending to prevent or abate forest fires, including the compulsory clearing and improvement of publicly and privately owned wild lands, to assess against said lands the benefits accruing thereto from such work, and to pay the damages to such lands in excess of the benefits, if any resulting from such work, to contract debts and pledge the public credit in carrying on said work and to repeal all provisions of the state constitution inconsistent with said amendment.

Yours respectfully,
CLIFFORD L. HILTON,
Attorney General.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage containing a Power of Sale, by reason of which default said Power of Sale has become operative, and the Administrator of the Assignee of the Mortgagee hereinafter named is authorized to declare the whole sum due and he hereby does declare said sum due, which mortgage was duly executed by Engebret N. Moe, a single man, Mortgagor, to D. B. Bakke, Mortgagee, dated April 23rd, 1919, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 25th day of April, A. D. 1919, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 83 of Mortgages, on page 252,

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said D. B. Bakke, Mortgagee, to Deposit Bank of Winona, Winona, Minnesota, by written assignment, dated May 17th, 1919, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 24th day of May, A. D. 1919, at 10 o'clock A. M., in Book 80 of Mortgages, on page 270,

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Deposit Bank of Winona, Winona, Minnesota, to Bridget Ryan, by written assignment, dated September 13th, A. D. 1919, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 17th day of September, A. D. 1924, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 110 of Mortgages, on page 324,

And whereas, the said Administrator of the Estate of said Bridget Ryan, the assignee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms of said mortgage and the Power of Sale therein contained, and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice, the sum of Thirty-six Hundred Dollars ($3600.00), with accumulated interest from the 23rd day of April, 1921, at the rate of six per cent per annum; and whereas, the said Power of Sale has become operative and no action or proceedings having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof,

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz:

Lots One (1) and Two (2), the Southeast Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (SE¼SW¼) and the Southwest Quarter of the Southeast Quarter (SW¼SE¼) of Section Twenty-five (25), the Southwest Quarter of the Southeast Quarter (SW¼SE¼) of Section Thirty-three (33), all in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North of Range Forty-two (42) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, and,

The North Half of the Southeast Quarter (N½SE¼) and the North Half of the Southwest Quarter (N½SW¼) of Section Thirty-one (31) in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North of Range Forty-one (41) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, containing a total of Three Hundred Thirty-six and 55-100 (336.55) acres more or less according to the United States Government survey thereof, all in Marshall County and State of Minnesota.

Which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the Front door of the County Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State on the 18th day of November, 1924, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the amount then due on said mortgage and interest, together with the costs and disbursements of such sale and Seventy-five Dollars attorneys fees stipulated as attorneys fees in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

Dated September 20, 1924.

JAMES P. TOWEY, as Administrator of the Estate of Bridget Ryan, deceased, the said Bridget Ryan being the Assignee of Mortgagee.

W. J. SMITH,
Attorney for Administrator of the Estate of Bridget Ryan, deceased, the said Bridget Ryan being the Assignee of Mortgagee,

Valuable Hints to Patrons

Delivering Cream to our Creamery

Pasteurization is very important, yet to have it done in an inefficient way is worse than not at all. In view of the fact we ask the cooperation and urge upon all patrons to try and do their share to help us. First— You must try and bring a 1st grade cream and have same delivered in the forenoon if possible. Second— Help us to get our average test 30 per cent or better. Sweet cream can be pasteurized more efficiently than sour, and high testing cream will save you more money for the reason that with a low testing cream it is impossible to churn it without considerable butterfat being drained out with the buttermilk.

MOST IMPORTANT NEWS OF WORLD

Big Happenings of the Week Condensed for the Benefit of Busy Readers.

Washington

Washington—Ratification of the treaty with Italy to prevent illegal importation of intoxicating liquors were exchanged at the state department.

Washington—Howard M. Gore, assistant secretary of agriculture, returned to Washington to assume the duties of acting secretary as a result of the death of Secretary Wallace.

Washington — Secretary Hoover called a national conference on street and highway safety to meet in Washington December 15, 16 and 17. The purpose will be to obtain better organization and co-operation of activities in the reduction of traffic accidents and representatives of police departments, insurance companies, safety council, chamber of commerce, labor unions, automobile associations and other organizations from all parts of the country, will attend.

Domestic

Glenn Falls, N. Y.—Snow whitened the ground at Indian lake and a flurry, which lasted about an hour, was reported at North Creek.

Pittsburgh—The body of John Lapaglia, wealthy Italian merchant, who was slain in his luxurious apartment either by blackhanders or bootleggers, police believe, was taken to Cleveland for burial.

Denver—Dr. Henry Augustus Buchtel, 79 years old, former governor of Colorado and chancellor emeritus of the Univesity of Denver, died in his home here.

Kansas City, Mo.—John Lavan has been signed to manage the Kansas City American Association Club again next year. Terms of the contract were not made public.

Chicago—Radiocasting station WJJD, named in honor of James J. Davis, secretary of labor, director general of the Loyal Order of Moose and founder of Mooseheart, will be officially opened.

Chicago—A new traction plan, calling for the immediate construction of a subway system which would involve $105,950,000 and the union of the present surface lines and elevated system.

Milwaukee—Covered with weeds and leaves, the body of Julia Twardowski, 21 years old, of Milwaukee, who had been missing from home since September 24, was found in a field near the Racine-Milwaukee county line by a band of hunters.

Milwaukee—Two women and a baby are dead, one man is not expected to live and three other members of a motor party from Madison, Wis., are seriously injured as a result of a crossing collision between their automobile and a Milwaukee bound passenger train near here.

Montreal—The Prince of Wales was the guest of the city of Montreal at an informal reception at the golf club at Laval Sur-Le-Lac. Mayor Patenaude, president of the club, proposed a toast to "Son Altessec, Le Prince de Galles," (his highness the Prince of Wales), which was followed by a rousing cheer.

San Francisco—The American army aviators who flew around the world were presented with a check for $7,426.99 here. The check was presented by Mayor James Rolph, Jr., at a public reception. The money was contributed by "the people of San Francisco." Lieutenant Lowell H. Smith, commander of the flight accepted on behalf of his comrades.

Chicago—William L. Bodine, superintendent of compulsory education, decreed that men who were married to girls of 16 years or younger must go to jail if they do not keep their wives in school. His order resulted from publicity given to the case of two girls, both 15, who had married with the avowed intention of escaping school by so doing.

Fort Myers, Fla.—The storm which has been raging here for three days assumed greater proportions with a 45 mile wind and heavy rains. The barometer read 29.22, and the indications were that the worst of the storm had not yet arrived. Many streets in the city were flooded, and all business houses have been closed. The city is without lights or power. High water is responsible for most of the damage. Train service is delayed.

New York—A congregation that packed the First Presbyterian church in Fifth avenue heard Rev. Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, Baptist minister, preach what may have been his last sermon from that pulpit. It was announced that a meeting of the church congregation would be held to act on the resignation which Dr. Fosdick presented to the New York presbytery. Dr. Fosdick in his sermon appealed to the congregation to remain in the church regardless of what disposition might ultimately be made of his case, which has been a storm center since 1922.

Tacoma, Wash.—Public and private schools here were reopened after being closed since September 25, because of an epidemic of infantile paralysis.

Caruthersville, Mo.—"These are my bonds," said Hammie Shane, 25 years old, seizing a rifle and a shotgun when, in Magistrate Court, Squire John Henderson announced he would be held under $1,000 bond on a charge of violating the prohibition laws. With the shotgun under one arm and the rifle under the other, Shane strode from the room while four deputies looked on. Police are now seeking him.

New York—Sir Thomas Lipton has not given up hope of lifting the American cup in the international yacht races. He arrived on the United States line steamship Leviathan and announced his intention of being a contender for the cup two years hence when the yacht that he hopes will carry his colors to victory will be ready for the race.

Sports

New York—Mike McTigue, world's light heavyweight champion, has been suspended for one year by the New York boxing commission for his failure to accept the challenge of Gene Tunney, American titleholder. McTigue's suspension puts a stop to the negotiations that had been nearly completed for a fight with Paul Berlenbach.

New York—Cozy Dolan, former New York Giant coach, who was banned from baseball with Jimmy O'Connell on charges of attempted bribery, will bring suit against Commissioner Landis and organized baseball for alleged slander according to announcement by W. J. Fallon, noted criminal attorney, who has been engaged by Dolan to handle the case.

Iowa City—Captain Leland Parkin lead his Iowa team to a 13 to 0 victory over Minnesota here. The game was the feature of Iowa's annual homecoming. Headed by Parkin, Iowa was disclosed as a powerful, dangerous and courageous eleven. Minnesota floundered hopelessly. Brilliant open field running after plunges through the tackles, by Parkin, was the outstanding feature of the game.

Foreign

Copenhagen—A huge vivisection laboratory offered Denmark by the Rockefeller institute has aroused a loud protest from the Danish societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals.

Berlin — Germany's bankers and brokers went on strike, closing the stock exchange to protest against the turnover tax, which is about $4 per $250.

Buenos Aires—Professor Clementionelli is dead. He came into prominence two years ago when he headed an expedition in a futile effort to find a plesiosaurus.

Mexico City—A Laredo-Mexico City passenger train was wrecked by bandits, who killed the engineer, fireman and two soldiers of the escort, pillaged an express car and robbed the passengers.

Rome—The body of Pope Leo XIII was removed from its provisional resting place in St. Peter's to the tomb provided for it in the Basilica of St. John Lateran. The transition was conducted in complete privacy, but with all due ceremonials.

Copenhagen—"Confiscation of fortunes," is the chief point in the taxation program which will be tried out in Denmark by the socialist finance minister. To get $414,250,000 more than the present taxes, he will levy on all big private incomes.

Osaka—Patrick Murphy, advance agent for Major Pedro Zanni, Argentine aviator now at Tokio, ready to undertake the trans-Pacific leg of his world air cruise, is here attempting to charter three steamers of 5,000 tons for service as supply ships in the Bering sea.

London — Miss Elsie Kippling, daughter of Rudyard Kipling, was married at St. Margaret's church, Westminster, to Captain George Rambridge, honorary attache of the British legtion at Brussels. A reception was given at Stanley Baldwin's home in Eaton square, which was loaned for the occasion.

Copenhagen — Denmark welcomed Prince and Princess Vigo home from their honeymoon in America. The Princess Vigo formerly was Miss Green of New York. Thousands of citizens of Copenhagen joined in greeting the American born princess, who was kissed by the king and queen on her arrival. The couple will reside at Bernstorff castle.

Plymouth, England—Lady Astor, who is seeking re-election to parliament as a conservative, had a lively open air meeting in the socialist center of her constituency. While she parried gibes with witty retorts, children stripped her automobile of Astorite literature, substituting that of her socialist opponent. They sang lustily "The Red Flag," the communist song.

Manila—A serious race riot was threatened here as the result of the killing of Chang Sui, a Chinese merchant, by a Filipino, in a quarrel over a business transaction. Five Filipinoes were wounded in a fight with Chinese that followed. Police reserves were called out and quelled the rioting. Chinese stores were stoned in several portions of the city. The police fear further trouble.

Mexicali, Lower California—The Mexican newspaper, Mercurio, printed a statement that, of 12 Japanese who crossed the international boundary line here in a day from the United States, two were representatives of the Japanese general staff and 10 were Japanese financiers and industrial experts, who had come to finance and direct a large colonization project in Lower California.

Paris—Premier Herriot, received Prince Cantacuzene, Rumanian charge d'affairs, and again repeated his decision not to lend any money to Rumania. Prince Cantacuzene presented a memorandum from his government reciting the securities and advantages of such a loan, but the French premier is determined not to lend any more money to the small Allies until the financial status of France is more stable.

London—British amateur wireless pioneers again spanned the 13,000 mile gulf between the homeland and New Zealand.

City National bank, Bismarck, offers cash prizes of $5, $3, and $2 to highest individual prize winners of Burleigh county; and $5, $3, and $2 for highest individual prize winners of Kidder county.

Bonham Brothers, Bismarck, offer $20 watch and chain to the individual exhibitor scoring the highest in the territory comprising McLean, Emmons, Kidder, and Burleigh counties.

F. A. Knowles, Bismarck, offers silver cup to exhibitor scoring highest in territory comprising Morton, Burleigh, and Emmons counties.

Oscar H. Will & Co., Bismarck, offer gold and silver medals for best 10 ears of Dent corn, and also for the best 10 ears of Flint corn exhibited by any of their contract growers.

These special prizes, somewhat local, are to be supplemented with other district prizes for other sections of the state, it is said.

The corn show, which was originated to stimulate interest among corn growers and properly advertise North Dakota as in the corn belt, is being given the co-operation of the Northern Pacific Railroad company, Mr. Bradley said. The railway company will distribute on its lines, if desired, the best pictures selected from those submitted in the "Best Picture of a North Dakota Corn Field" contest. The pictures also will be used in publicity pamphlets.

FARGOAN TALKED FOR PLACE

Coulter May Be Next Secretary of Agriculture.

Fargo, N. D.—Dr. John Lee Coulter, president of the North Dakota Agricultural college, probably will be considered by President Coolidge as a successor to Henry C. Wallace, secretary of agriculture, who died Saturday.

Information to that effect is contained in several Washington dispatches received since the death of Mr. Wallace.

Dr. Coulter, at the time the socalled Coulter bill was being considered, was mentioned in Washington as a possibility for the berth of secretary of agriculture, for it was understood at that time that President Coolidge was disposed to make a change in that position in the event of his election this year.

"Former Governor Frank O. Lowden of Illinois, and Dr. John Lee Coulter, president of the North Dakota Agricultural college, were being discussed in Washington tonight as Mr. Wallace's successor," says one dispatch that came out of Washington Saturday night.

Dr. Coulter, during the period that President Coolidge was interesting himself in obtaining a thorough understanding of the agricultural problem in the northwest, was called into conference with the president on several occasions.

WALLACE RITES ARE HELD

Many Gather to Pay Last Tribute to Secretary of Agriculture.

Washington.—Funeral services for Henry C. Wallace, secretary of agriculture since 1921, were held Monday in the East room of the White House, where high officials of the government, including President and Mrs. Coolidge, gathered with foreign diplomats and friends of the family to pay their last respects.

The services also represented the government's official tribute to the late cabinet member and governmental offices were closed until 1 p. m.

Secretaries Mellon, Weeks, Wilbur, Davis and Work; Attorney General Stone; Postmaster General New, and acting Secretary of Agriculture Gore, served as honorary pallbearers. Actvie pallbearers were selected from officials of the agricultural department.

The services were conducted by Dr. Wallace Radcliffe, pastor-emeritus of the New York Avenue Presbyterian church, assisted by the pastor of the church, the Rev. C. E. Hawthorne.

Navy Keeps Open Ship.

Washington.—The navy kept "open ship" Monday—Navy day and the birthday of Theodore Roosevelt. In every harbor and at every naval establishment the public was invited to inspect the workings of the arm of sea defense. In addition at various stations, patriotic ceremonies were held, high naval officers delivered addresses, naval airplanes flew over much of the country, and every effort was put forth to give the people a more intimate knowledge of the spirit and purposes of the service.

St. Peter—With a broken leg and a badly bruised body, Winfield Turner propped himself up in the field a quarter of a mile from a highway and tried in vain to attract the attention of several passing motorists. After an hour a patient of the hospital for the insane, taking his daily walk, saw Turner's signals and took a message to Mrs. Turner.

Owatonna—University high school of Minneapolis was selected as the next meeting place for the annual convention of the Minnesota State High School Press association.

Warren—The Minnesota Potato Exchange has opened the Warren potato warehouse, under direction of Leslie Grange.

Duluth—Merritt Memorial park here was dedicated to park purposes by a group of Duluth citizens. A bronze tablet marked the corner of two lots where the first church edifice in the Oneota community stood. It was built in 1890.

DETROIT WOMAN RECOVERS

Health Much Better After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Detroit, Michigan.—"Your little book left at my door was my best doctor. I read it, then said to my husband, 'Please go and get me some Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I want to take it.' The first month I took three bottles of Vegetable Compound and one of Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine, and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash. If you only knew how much better I feel! Now when my friends say they are sick I tell them to take Lydia E. Pinkham's medicines. I give the little book and your medicines the best of thanks."—Mrs. HAMERINK, 3765 25th Street, Detroit, Michigan.

In newspapers and booklets we are constantly publishing letters from women, who explain how they were helped by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

These letters should guide you. If you are troubled with pains and nervousness, or any feminine disorder, bear in mind that the Vegetable Compound has helped other women and should help you. For sale by druggists everywhere.

Wave Catches Crowd

Hundreds of persons at Southsea beach, England, were thoroughly drenched when a huge wave produced by the passing of two big transatlantic liners swept upon the shore. The Berengaria and the Majestic were passing each other off the Isle of Wight and the wash set up by their combined motion rolled like a tidal wave on the lower end of the beach.

Help That Achy Back!

Are you dragging around, day after day, with a dull, unceasing backache? Are you lame in the morning, bothered with headaches, dizziness and urinary disorders? Feel tired, irritable and discouraged? Then there's surely something wrong, and likely it's kidney weakness. Don't neglect it! Get back your health while you can. Use Doan's Pills, a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys. Doan's have helped thousands, and should help you. Ask your Neighbor!

A North Dakota Case

Mrs. G. C. McAlester, Cando, N. D., says: "My back ached and got so lame across the small part when I stooped I could hardly straighten. Sometimes I became dizzy when stooping and could hardly see across the room. When these attacks came on I got Doan's Pills and they always fixed me up in good shape."

"IT ISN'T ENDED"

SYNOPSIS. — Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr. John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Joan Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance. She is upset, through no fault of her own, and makes a trivial blunder at a critical moment. The patient dies and Doctor Lancaster accuses her of clumsiness. She is suspended, the action meaning the end of her hope of a career as a nurse.

In the town of forty thousand inhabitants Joan was as isolated as she had been in the latter years at home. Her life was as unsophisticated and as simple, and she was so unacquainted with the conditions and circumstances of existence that her dismissal seemed to her an irreparable disaster. She had won good opinions, she had been praised, and it seemed monstrous that her faintness at a critical moment should have ruined her whole life prospects. What made the tragedy the less tolerable was the admixture of the farcical. There was a simple and absurd explanation. Mrs. Webb's colored cook, Amanda, had quarreled with her mistress that morning, and Joan had had to go to the hospital without her breakfast.

She got up and walked slowly homeward without having resolved her problem. Inside the boarding house the air was like a furnace, and the smell of cooking was triumphant and dominant.

Inside the kitchen, seen through the open door, was Amanda, the cook, and Mrs. Webb, the landlady.

"Here's Amanda again!" Mrs. Webb called to Joan. "My dear, the idea of your running away without your breakfast this morning! Now you sit right down and have your lunch, Miss Wentworth!"

Joan was not hungry, but it was impossible to oppose the resolute insistence of Mrs. Webb, backed by the penitent cook, whose black face, as she flitted from the kitchen to the dining room, radiated remorse and good intentions.

"One can't get along without the proper food at the proper times," said Mrs. Webb as she set down the dishes before Joan. "But I call it real sensible of you to have come home early. Some girls wouldn't have thought of that."

Joan choked suddenly, and Mrs. Webb perceived her distress. She bent over her and placed a kitchen-roughened hand upon her shoulder.

"My dear, what is it? What is the matter? Something gone wrong at that old hospital?" she asked. "Tell me, now, honey!"

"It isn't anything, Mrs. Webb," said Joan, striving valiantly to keep back her tears. "Well, then, I'm—I'm discharged."

Mrs. Webb withdrew her hand and placed it upon one hip, bringing the other into corresponding position. She glared at Joan, as the convenient focus of her indignation.

"I never heard of such a thing!" she cried. "Who's dared to discharge you, Miss Wentworth? Why, it was only yesterday Miss Gray was saying you were the only one in the hospital that attended to her work instead of trying to make dates with the doctors! I've had the nurses two years now, Miss Wentworth, and they ain't a snap better than the salesladies I used to keep. A pack of featherheads! If some of them had been discharged 'twould serve them right. But not you, my dear. It's that old Doctor Lancaster!"

"It was, and I think he was right. I felt faint from the smell of ether—"

"Of course you did!" cried Mrs. Webb. "I always knew the day would come when you would. Those smells make my head go round and round whenever I take the short cut that side of the park. I always said you weren't cut out for that sort of work. It's all right for them strong he-horse girls that's made for it, but what you need is to marry some good man who can take care of you, not to go nursing a lot of dock-hands and seeing people's insides opened up. It's my belief that when the Lord put our insides inside and our outsides outside he meant 'em to stay there," snorted Mrs. Webb.

"Well," said Joan wearily, "it's ended now. And I don't know what I'm going to do."

"But I say it isn't ended!" cried Mrs. Webb, concentrating all her indignation against Lancaster in a venomous glare at Joan. "It's only just begun. If that old Doctor Lancaster dares to discharge you, I'm going to tell everything I know about him. Miss Wentworth, that man's no more fit to be at the head of a hospital, with ladies under him, than he's fit to fly. What is he? Nothing but a fast liver and a common drunkard."

"Never mind, Mrs. Webb!"

"But I do mind. To think of a man like that, who went about with a gang of common tramps for years, Miss Wentworth, just breaking away from his job and hoboing it up and down the country and then coming back and getting his job again and acting as he does! All that I say is common knowledge. Five years after the hospital had seen the last of him in he walks, as bold as brass, and puts the head doctor out, and says the hospital's his and he's going to run it again. And him being in charge of the nurses—him that runs 'round in his auto with every pack of cheap actresses that comes to Avonmouth! I know what they are! I haven't been in the boarding house business twenty years for nothing!"

Mrs. Webb was becoming incoherent. Joan succeeded in stopping the flow of vilification at last, mainly because Mrs. Webb had exhausted it.

"Now I tell you what you are going to do, my dear," she said. "You're going straight to that old Lancaster's house and you are going to ask for your place back. And you're going to get it, too."

"Mrs. Webb, how can I do that?"

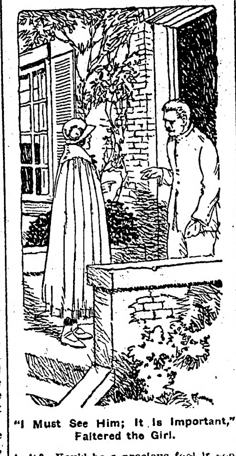
"How can you do it? Why, you can manage him all right, my dear. Yes, I guess 'tis going to be all right. I suppose he lost his temper. When a man leads the sort of life he does he hasn't much good humor left the morning after. I know about that. You just go to him and act as if you didn't care much and let him think you look on him as just the finest man in the world."

"Please, Mrs. Webb!" expostulated Joan; and as she spoke there came back into her mind vividly the sinister advice of the dark-haired girl.

"You've only got to let him see your face, my dear," continued the landlady. "You see, it's this way. When he's in the hospital he's thinking about his work. A nurse is just a nurse to him then. But after his work's over she's different. Now don't tell me you can't make that man do anything you want him to, because I know better."

Joan crimsoned. "I couldn't think of such a thing," she protested.

"And why not?" inquired the other. "If you've got good looks, ain't you going to use them? It isn't as if I was asking you to do anything wrong, is it? You'd be a precious fool if you didn't. Any girl can twist a man round her finger, especially if she looks weepy."



"I Must See Him; It Is Important," Faltered the Girl.

Joan looked at Mrs. Webb in great distress. She rose, but the landlady followed her toward the door.

"You see, my dear," she went on "if you were given that sort of face by the Almighty, why shouldn't you use it to get plain, common justice done you? It's your job that's at stake, and you all alone in the world. All you've got to do is to make him forget that he's dealing with a nurse. There isn't anybody would think twice about it. Didn't Amanda do it this morning, coming to me with her big, black, honest face, and looking at me so that I had to take her back, as I was glad enough to do? You go straight and see that old Lancaster and try it, that's all!"

A nurse passed the window and came up the steps.

"Mrs. Webb, you won't say a word about what I've told you to the others, please?" asked Joan.

She flew upstairs and, flinging herself down on her bed, stared out dismally toward the monument. The catastrophe had swept her little, unsheltered world away. The sense of her loneliness swept over her like a black cloud, appalling her. She was cut off from life, and utterly helpless outside the medium in which she had lived.

Because she felt this sense of homesickness, her outraged pride began to vanish before the terrors that her imagination conjured up. Starvation, the ultimate terror of her childish days on the estate, which like a living thing had gnawed into her mother's nine hundred dollars, seemed incredibly real and near. She must ask for her position back!

She must face Lancaster in his home, humble her pride, and bow to him; but she watched the sun decline and the shadows lengthen, and for a time she could not bring herself to her task.

What strengthened her at last was the realization that her status must be settled before she faced the day nurses coming home off duty. She slipped on her cloak and went out of the house softly, and to escape the landlady's attentions Joan went hastily toward Lancaster's house.

She had passed it almost daily on her journeys to and from the hospital. It was an ordinary brick house in a new block at the north end of the park, and commonplace enough, but now, to her excited eyes, it seemed to reflect the grim personality of its owner in the staring windows, with the shining door knobs of brass, and the brass name plate. Her heart was beating with panic, and it was with difficulty that she contrived to press the bell and to remain until the door was opened.

A white attendant confronted her—a sullen, undersized man with square shoulders, who scowled at her as he stood blocking the passage.

"Doctor Lancaster?" asked Joan.

"He doesn't see patients after five," answered the man.

"I must see him. It is important," faltered the girl.

"Well, I'll find out if he can see you," the fellow grumbled. "Walk in if you want to."

He had not recognized Joan's uniform beneath the cloak. She gave him her card and went into the waiting room. There the sense of the terror which made that place its domain, the accumulated fears of all who had ever waited there for the approaching verdict, seemed to leap out at her.

Then Joan heard Lancaster's voice in the next room, which was divided from the waiting room by folded doors. It was audible as a bass rumble, emerging occasionally into a distinguishable sound. Lancaster was talking with somebody, and he was growing angry. That was an ill omen of what was to come!

Joan braced her nerves. She was anything but a coward, and, having made up her mind, she intended to carry her scheme through.

Suddenly Lancaster's voice was raised in violent altercation.

"A nice mess you've made of everything!" he cried. "I've tolerated you too long. I've been a fool, but I've finished with you now. Go back where you came from!"

Another voice spoke in indistinct tones. It was that of a man, and it was almost abject in contrast with Lancaster's violence.

"I've finished with you, I tell you!" cried Lancaster. "I've borne this burden long enough. You can get out of my house. You can get out of my life."

"I've borne it long enough, too," replied the other, doggedly. "Who started it? Who made the first proposal?"

"I did, out of kindness to you. And how have you repaid me?"

"By placing myself, soul and body, at your service," retorted the second man, aroused into some show of spirit.

"Who picked you out of the gutter and set you on your feet?" rejoined the doctor, "Answer that! You can't! You know you can't! Where would you be today if it were not for me?"

The second man said something in a low voice.

"Myers? A lot I care about that!" retorted Lancaster. "I tell you—what's that?" The white attendant was speaking at the door. Joan recognized his rasping voice.

"No! No!" cried Lancaster, violently. "I see nobody. Why can't these women come during my hours? Aren't they posted plainly enough upon the card in my window? Tell her?—what? Important? Well, let her wait, then, until I get ready to see her."

The man's steps died away along the rear end of the passage. Joan heard the two men talking again. Then the sounds ceased. She heard the floor in the adjoining room creak beneath a quick tread. Lancaster was coming in! Her fears gave her resolution. She would anticipate that movement, see him, insist. She left the waiting room and went into the hall.

It was hung with little pictures of a uniform size, each exactly like its neighbor. It came into the girl's mind, even during those few hasty steps, that this was essentially a man's house; a woman would have arranged things differently, have given the place personality, have made her presence felt somehow, even in the decoration of this dark passage. The atmosphere was that of an institution, not of a home.

Then she was standing with caught breath at the door of the consulting room, which was a little ajar, as if the catch had become unfastened. She knocked, opened it, and went in.

Is it legitimate for a pretty girl to vamp her way, when ordinary methods fail? What do you think?

Tells Work of Statesmen

The Congressional Record is a journal of the proceedings of the congress of the United States, dating from 1799. Prior to that date the senate held secret sessions only, but thereafter publication was required, save in the case of "executive sessions." Record has been the title since 1875. Before that date the journal was entitled Annals of Congress (1789-99 for the house, and 1799-1824 for both branches), Register of Debates until 1837, and through 1874 Congressional Globe.

After 15 Hard Months— His USKIDE Soles Still Good!

THINK of that! Marcellus R. Abel, a Cincinnati traffic officer, wore this pair of USKIDE Soles fifteen months, in rain, slush, on hot, rasping pavements.

College Boat Races.

The first college boat races held were between boats owned by Yale students in Boston harbor in 1844, the contestants being an eight-oared gig and a dugout canoe. The first intercollegiate race was rowed by Yale and Harvard crews in eight-oared barges over a two-mile course on Lake Winnipesaukee in 1852.

GREAT NORTHERN VALUATION

SHOWS NO "WATER"

In response to assertions that railroad stocks were watered and that the investments recorded in the companies' books were inflated, Congress, in 1913, by the LaFollette Act, directed the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine, among other things, the cost of reproduction new, cost of reproduction less depreciation, and the value of the various railroads in the United States.

The corporate assets of the Great Northern Company consist of two classes of property: One is the physical property used for transportation purposes and located in the United States; the other consists of investments in stocks and bonds of other companies, including lines located in Canada, and other miscellaneous property used for non-carrier purposes. The Interstate Commerce Commission recently has completed its tentative valuation of the first of these, that is, the physical property used for transportation purposes and located in the United States. It has not valued the second class of property because not required to do so by the terms of the Act.

The value as found by the Commission for Great Northern properties used for transportation purposes and located in the United States as of June 30, 1915, was as follows:

Total used	395,358,655.00

In arriving at these figures, the Interstate Commerce Commission deducted $65,140,474.00 from the cost of reproduction new on account of assumed depreciation. The Company, of course, contends that the depreciation of certain parts of the properties, such as the aging of its roadbed, is more than offset by the appreciation of the property as a whole, as it is well known that a railroad property in use for several years is better and worth more for transportation purposes than a newly built property.

Included in the second class property not valued by the Commission is:
604 miles of railroad in Canada.
Nearly 49 per cent of the Stock of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.
One-half of the stock of the Spokane, Portland & Seattle Railway.
Also the stocks of some other smaller railway companies, and the stocks of coal, lumber, land and other subsidiary corporations.

The investment in securities not valued by the Commission amounts to $227,076,312.83. Other property not used for transportation purposes amounts to $24,315,418.31, so that the Commission's value on the first class of property, plus the value of the second class of property, which the Commission did not value, amounts to $643,132,033.14.

Since the valuation date, June 30, 1915, there has been added $104,881,141.26 which brings the total value of Great Northern property to July 1, 1924, up to $748,013,174.40. The total par value of stocks and bonds of the Great Northern as of July 1, 1924, was $563,258,165.16, showing an excess of $184,755,009.24 of value above the total capitalization. The following table makes these statements clear:

PROPERTY		CAPITALIZATION
Portion of owned property valued by the Commission as of June 30, 1915	$391,740,302.00	Great Northern Stock	$249,477,150.00
Stocks, bonds and other properties not valued by Commission as of June 30, 1915	227,076,312.83	Great Northern Bonds	313,781,015.16
Other property as of June 30, 1915	24,315,418.31	EXCESS OF PROPERTY OVER CAPITALIZATION ON JULY 1, 1924	184,755,009.24
Property added since June 30, 1915	104,881,141.26
Total	$748,013,174.40	Total	$748,013,174.40

This furnishes the most conclusive answer to the charge of watered stock.

The Great Northern never did have and never will have a Dollar of Watered Stock

Petty Politics.

I have been informed through a reliable source that among the different stories being circulated against me in this campaign is one that is being told in the eastern part of this county to the effect that Marshall county is paying for two Probate Judges. Now, in my opinion, anyone that will circulate a big lie like this is dangerous. He is either a moron or else helplessly foolish, if he imagines that he can make the people believe anything as unreasonable as that. The state constitution provides for the pay of one Judge of Probate in each county and no more; and so if the county treasurer is paying for another judge of probate, he will have to pay for him out of his own pocket, and this he is not likely to do. The state law provides, however, that if the judge of probate is sick, or otherwise disqualified to hear a case, then the neighboring judge may be called in to hold court, the same as is the case in the District Court. It is now soon 28 years that I have had the honor to be your Judge of Probate Court and during all these years all that has been paid to other probate judges by Marshall county is $18 and the traveling expenses from Thief River Falls to Warren and Hallock to Warren. This amount I have saved the county over and over many times, by holding court after hours, for instance in insanity cases, so as not to have to hold the patient over until the next day. I hope that this little information will do away with the falsehoods and lies spread by my enemies in this campaign. I remain

Your honest servant,
PETER H. HOLM.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage containing a Power of Sale, by reason of which default said Power of Sale has become operative, and the Administrator of the Assignee of the Mortgagee hereinafter named is authorized to declare the whole sum due and he hereby does declare said sum due, which mortgage was duly executed by Engebret S. Moe, a single man, Mortgagor, to D. B. Bakke, Mortgagee, dated April 3rd, 1919, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 25th day of April, A. D. 1919, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 93 of Mortgages, on page 252.

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said D. B. Bakke, Mortgagee, to Deposit Bank of Winona, Winona, Minnesota, by written assignment, dated May 17th, 1919, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 24th day of May, A. D. 1919, at 10 o'clock A. M., in Book 80 of Mortgages, on page 270.

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Deposit Bank of Winona, Winona, Minnesota, to Bridget Ryan, by written assignment, dated September 13th, A. D. 1919, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 17th day of September, A. D. 1924, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 110 of Mortgages, on page 324.

And whereas, the said Administrator of the Estate of said Bridget Ryan, the assignee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms of said mortgage and the Power of Sale therein contained, and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice, the sum of Thirty-six Hundred Dollars ($3600.00), with accumulated interest from the 23rd day of April, 1921, at the rate of six per cent per annum; and whereas, the said Power of Sale has become operative and no action or proceedings having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz:

Lots One (1) and Two (2), the Southeast Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (SE¼SW¼) and the Southwest Quarter of the Southeast Quarter (SW¼SE¼) of Section Twenty-five (25), the Southwest Quarter of the Southeast Quarter (SW¼SE¼) of Section Thirty-three (33), all in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North of Range Forty-two (42) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, and,

The North Half of the Southeast Quarter (N½SE¼) and the North Half of the Southwest Quarter (N½SW¼) of Section Thirty-one (31) in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (155) North of Range Forty-one (41) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, containing a total of Three Hundred Thirty-six and 55-100 (336.55) acres more or less according to the United States Government survey thereof, all in Marshall County and State of Minnesota.

Which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the Front door of the County Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State on the 18th day of November, 1924, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the amount then due on said mortgage and interest, together with the costs and disbursements of such sale and Seventy-five Dollars attorneys fees stipulated as attorneys fees in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

Dated September 29, 1924.

JAMES P. TOWEY, as Administrator of the Estate of Bridget Ryan, deceased, the said Bridget Ryan being the Assignee of Mortgagee.

W. J. SMITH,
Attorney for Administrator of the Estate of Bridget Ryan, deceased, the said Bridget Ryan being the Assignee of Mortgagee,

O. G. Gubrud

For Judge of Probate

Argyle, Minn., Oct. 27, 1924

O. G. Gubrud, nominee for Judge of Probate, is highly recommended and well qualified for the office which he seeks. He is a man of rugged honesty, well liked and respected by everybody in the community in which he lives.

One of the important matters to be considered is the fact that the Probate Judge will also be Judge of the Juvenile Court. In this field Mr. Gubrud is especially interested. It it important that we elect a Probate Judge who also has this matter at heart?

He is at the present time Justice of the Peace in Argyle and also holds other positions of trust. He has always proven himself a capable, energetic, trustworthy man, deserving of the confidence people have in him.

By giving him your vote on Tuesday, November 4th. you will be helping to elect the right man for the office. May we not depend on your support?

A Coolidge Victory

Calvin Coolidge has been elected by a good safe majority. Davis gets the usual democratic states. LaFollette gets Wisconsin and probably Montana and North Dakota.

Minnesota state ticket is safely republican. Cong. Wefald re-elected. Judge Holm and P. B. Malberg undoubtedly elected.

Holt village gave Coolidge 38 votes, Davis 4, LaFollette 36; Schall 25, Johnson 55; Christianson 26, Olson 55; Nolan 29, Holmes 47; Mike Holm 50, Stageberg 31; Rines 38, Berg 42; Hilton 34, Sullivan 43; Matson 37, Smith 41; Wilson 26, Johnson 38; Anderson 33, Fraser 28, Holt 37, Stone 43; Peterson 32, Wefald 49; Malberg 58, Green 20; Holm 51, Gubrud 29.

Valuable Hints to Patrons

Delivering Cream to our Creamery

Pasteurization is very important, yet to have it done in an inefficient way is worse than not at all. In view of the fact we ask the cooperation and urge upon all patrons to try and do their share to help us. First— You must try and bring a 1st grade cream and have same delivered in the forenoon if possible. Second— Help us to get our average test 30 per cent or better. Sweet cream can be pasteurized more efficiently than sour, and high testing cream will save you more money for the reason that with a low testing cream it is impossible to churn it without considerable butterfat being drained out with the buttermilk.

MOST IMPORTANT NEWS OF WORLD

Big Happenings of the Week Condensed for the Benefit of Busy Readers.

Washington

Washington—Sir Esme Howard, the British ambassador, called at the White House to pay his respects to President Coolidge upon his return from a summer's vacation.

Washington — Arrangements have been made at the White House, through the state department, for a visit of General Plutarco Elias Calles, president-elect of Mexico, with President Coolidge.

Washington—The Supreme Court refused to review a case brought by the Israelite House of David seeking a final decision on the right of members to the return of property they contributed to the organization's treasury and to pay for their services while members of the association.

Washington—Funeral services for Henry C. Wallace, secretary of agriculture since 1921, were conducted in the east room of the White House, where high officials of the government, including President and Mrs. Coolidge, gathered with foreign diplomats and friends of the family to pay their last respects.

Washington—Four United States district attorneys have been asked to resign and six others have resigned since last July as a result of failure in most instances to enforce the prohibition laws, Attorney General H. F. Stone said in reference to charges of lax prohibition enforcement.

Domestic

New York—An investigation was begun by District Attorney Banton of charges that eight corporations violated state laws prohibiting contributions of money to political parties.

Dayton, Ohio—Establishment of a four stop mail route from New York to Peking, is being considered by government postal officials, it was learned at McCook field here.

New York—Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick announced he will accept the invitation of the First Presbyterian church to continue to preach until the end of the church year, March, 1925.

Seattle—Seattle's new $4,500,000 community and tourists hotel, the Olympic, was officially commpleted with a public inspection. The building covers one square block and has 617 guest rooms.

Los Angeles — Engagement of Lieutenant Eric Nelson, world flier, and Miss Ruth Butler of Dayton, Ohio, was announced through the Los Angeles Times here. They will "take off" soon on their honeymoon, it was said.

Chicago—A carrier pigeon brought an appeal for help to the life guard station here, presumably from a disabled vessel in Lake Michigan. A message, tied to the bird's foot, read: "Five men afloat on Lake Michigan. Help quick. Captain White."

Norwich, Conn.—George A. Finn, former secretary and treasurer of the Bankers Trust Company of Norwich, arrested for alleged shortage in the bank's funds of $146,261.39, was specifically charged in City Court with embezzlement of $40,000.

Caldwell, Ohio—United States postal authorities are expected here in connection with the arrest of a man under federal indictment for the holdup of the mail train at Roundout, Ill., June 12. The man is in jail pending arrival of the officials. The prisoner refuses to talk.

New York—After a hard battle with 50-foot waves and a 75-mile gale in mid-Atlantic, the liner Homeric arrived in port 24 hours behind schedule. Two doors on the forward boat deck were smashed in and a casing box on the wireless apparatus was blown overboard.

Cambridge, Mass.—Hazing is a good thing for freshmen at Harvard College, members of the present first year class believe. Advancing the theory that sophomore-freshman rivalries would help unify the entering class and stamp out indifference, the Harvard freshman Discussion Club voted overwhelmingly in favor of hazing.

Montreal—Justice Bruneau in Superior Court annulled the marriage of Dame Laura Couture and Paul Emile Bordron, which took place in Detroit, 21 years ago, when Dame Couture testified that she had just discovered that her husband is still legally married to another woman. The couple have seven children.

Mexico City—Consternation prevails in Mexican and British commercial circles having connections with exporting firms in Great Britain and the countries comprising the British empire over announcement by the Mexican foreign office of the suppression of commercial relations with Great Britain, with the consequent closing of the Mexican consulates in London, Liverpool and Glasgow.

Detroit, Mich.—Three unidentified bodies were found in the ruins of the five story building of Scotten Kratz, Inc., a store fixture concern which was destroyed by fire.

Chicago—A new heavenly body, believed to be an asteroid, has been photographed at the Yerkes observatory by Professor E. B. Frost, director. It is invisible to the naked eye. The photographs have disclosed the body is not a comet, as thought by Dr. Baade, a German astronomer, who first espied it, Professor Frost said. He estimated its diameter at less than 50 miles.

New York—A blast 150 feet below the surface of the Hudson river completed another link in the chain of underwater passages that binds New York and New Jersey. Six feet of rock was swept away by dynamite and the vehicular tunnel, in process of construction two years, was opened.

New York—At a luncheon tendered to him by the Chamber of Commerce and attended by a number of the countrys leading industrial, banking and railroad men, General Plutarco Elias Calles, president-elect of Mexico, denied he was a radical and a "destructive man." The president elect said he wanted to raise Mexican educational standards so as to reduce the illiteracy of that country.

Sports

Minneapolis—The "Little Brown Jug" went to Ann Arbor and another score—Michigan 13, Minnesota 0—will be painted on it. Minnesota was crushed before an alert, polished Michigan machine. A homecoming crowd of 45,000, the largest crowd that has ever witnessed a gridiron game in the northwest, saw the defeat.

New York—William T. Tilden II., premier tennis player of the world, will desert the court for the studio early in January, to star in a motion picture entitled "Ageless Women." Tilden has signed a contract with Worthy Pictures, Inc., call for four pictures at a salary of about $4,000 a week. He will devote his entire time to the camera until the spring thaws out the tennis courts.

St. Paul—Fifteen members of the St. Paul baseball team, minor league champions of the 1924 season, reached St. Paul from Seattle, where the Association-Coast league series was called off after one game had been played, and several members of the party started the trek for their winter homes. The Seattle series was scheduled for nine games but was abbreviated by the treacherous fall weather on the coast.

Chicago—The Chicago National League club acquired Walter Maranville, second baseman; Charley Grimm, first baseman, and Wilbur Cooper, left-handed pitcher, all of the Pittsburgh Nationals, in exchange for Vic Aldridge, right-hand pitcher; George Grantham, second baseman, and Albert Niehaus, first baseman, the latter recently purchased by the Cubs from Chattanooga. No money was involved in the deal. The trade is the biggest of the winter season and, according to President William Veek of the Cubs, one of the largest ever put through in the National league.

Foreign

Paris—Arturo Alessandri, deposed president of Chile, arrived in Paris somewhat tired and unstrung from his recent experience.

Managua, Nicaragua—Robert J. McKinley of Kansas City, has obtained an oil concession from the Nicaraguan government for five departments and three districts.

Rome—City authorities were working to restore city activities after the tropical rainstorm which swept Rome. Property damage was high, but no lives were lost.

Paris—General Silorske, Polish minister, after a tour of inspection of French shipbuilding circles and trips in French submarines, opened negotiations for construction of a dozen new submarines for Poland.

Madrid—Colonel Millan-Astray, commander of the Spanish foreign legion in Morocco, was gravely wounded by an enemy bullet while on his way to Regaia. First Lieutenant Topete, his aide, was killed.

Honolulu—Navy officials announced that the submarine R-1 ran ashore on a soft coral reef at the entrance to Honolulu harbor, and is still ashore. The officers and crew, numbering 25, remained aboard until daylight, when they were rescued.

Paris—The reparations commission has decided to offer at auction the German government's shares in the "Oriental Railway Company" as payment for reparations. The sale will be open only to allied governments and their nationals.

Copenhagen — Norwegian, Swede and Danish industrial associations intend to protest to the international trade board in November against the investigation of the American tariff commission's Scandinavian committee into trade dumping on the American market.

Berlin—The consequences of the Chinese war were felt in Germany when the entire indigo dye plant of one of Germany's greatest chemical plants at Hochet was forced to close down. The factory is unable to export dyes to Chinese silk manufacturers because their business is crippled by the civil war.

Berlin—A free for all fight at a wild election meeting organized in Munich by the facisti under General Ludendorff was quelled as if by magic when the chairman read the newest party manifesto, promising enforcement of low prices for food and good beer in case of fascisti victory. Despite the alluring wet plank, General Ludendorff seems unable to keep his party together. Three more of his leaders have retired.

Brussels—The council of the League of Nations opened its emergency session here to solve the problem of the Mosul oil fields, claimed by both Turkey and England. The immediate job before the council is to settle the boundaries of England's mandate over the Irak and Mosul territory.

Paris—Sudden fame in the dress making world has come to Marcelle Guillou, a Paris seamstress, who by three days work on a prize gown won the promise of a position paying her as much in a day as she now earns in a week and putting her on a salary equality with a cabinet minister.

TRAINS SERVE N. D. PRODUCTS

North Dakota Foods Served Exclusively on N. P. Diners During November

Fargo, N. D.—From soup to the after dinner beverage, North Dakota products will be served exclusively in Northern Pacific dining cars throughout the entire month of November.

"November, North Dakota Month," says the inscription across the bottom of the cover page of the menu card.

On the cover page is a typical North Dakota scene, a big corn shock in the foreground, surrounded by turkeys and pumpkins with a big, red, balloon-roofed barn and neat farm home in the background.

These facts are carried concerning North Dakota:

Area—70,738 square miles; population, 639,956; acres in farms, 28,000,000; value, grain crop 1924, $239,083,600; value, diversified products, 1924, $124,905,100; miles of railroad, 6,384; rich farms, temperate climate, adequate transportation.

And here's the special dinner that will be served during November, all products of the state of North Dakota:

"Beef broth with barley, snowflake salteens, gherkins, grainfed turkey, currant jelly, whipped potatoes, baked Hubbard squash, heart o' wheat muffins, cherry and apple salad, apple pie, cheese or ice cream, big Sioux wafers."

The menu card also carries autographed statements as follows: "North Dakota welcomes new settlers. We have room for them to live and succeed. R. A. Nestos, governor."

"This year North Dakota has produced nearly $600 of new wealth in agricultural products for every man, woman and child in the state. The average agricultural production for the United States from all sources is about $300. John Lee Coulter, president North Dakota College of Agriculture."

"Testifying to the great resourcefulness of North Dakota's farm and dairy industries, today you will find butter, eggs, cheese, poultry, beef, mutton, veal, pork, fruit, vegetables, flour, cereals and even sugar on the Northern Pacific dining cars, all North Dakota products. A. B. Smith, passenger traffic manager, Northern Pacific railway."

A. C. WINS OVER U, 20 TO 7

Agricultural College Wins Annual Football Classic.

North Dakota's annual football classic which was played last Saturday, ending with a victory for the Bison of the state agricultural college, brought further laurels to several graduates of North Dakota high schools. The name of Claude Miller, versatile halfback on the Bison team, will long be remembered by football fans of this state for the sterling work he performed in Saturday's game against the state university.

Miller, a product of Fargo high school, made two sensational runs through the entire university team, each run scoring a touchdown. Both of these runs were on returning punts. Miller crossed the goal line a third time but the play did not count because of one of the players on his team being offside. In the final minutes of play Rumpeltes, Miller's teammate, made a third touchdown. The game ended with the Aggies at the long end of a 20 to 7 score, the university having scored once in the third quarter.

The Bison presented a versatile attack and a stiff defense, completely outplaying the Flickertails in the first, second and fourth periods. The play of the Bison team was bettered by the fact that they were striving valiantly to win the last Homecoming game for their coach, S. E. Borleske, who resigned last week. The Bison wanted desperately to give the coach another victory and that hope made a good team into a great team for the one game at least.

TWENTY ARRESTED AT NILES

City Quiet Under Military Rule—Wounded List Reaches 13.

Niles, Ohio.—With peace and order restored here, military, county and city officials turned their attention to fixing the responsibility for Saturday's rioting between the Ku Klux Klan and the anti-Klansmen, which occurred while Klansmen were preparing to parade.

The list of known wounded as the result of the skirmishes remained at 13.

Twenty arrests were made Sunday, most of them on charges of intoxication, while several found to be carrying concealed weapons were so charged. These were rounded up by national guardsmen. All will be tried in civil courts, General Hough explaining that although the city is under qualified martial law, the military authorities are in supreme command, civil authorities are still functioning.

Camp Grafton To Be Rebuilt.

Devils Lake, N. D.—The War department plans to spend $130,000 on Camp Grafton, near this city, during the next five years, according to an announcement made by Adj. Gen. G. S. Fraser, who in company with Col Edward Davis, of Washington, D. C., and Maj. R. W. Chase of Omaha, Neb., has just finished a tour of inspection of the camp site of the 164th infantry. The program of improvement includes a water and light system next year to cost $24,600; a complete sewer system in 1926 to cost $28,100.

BEFORE TWINS WERE BORN

Was Very Miserable. Felt Lots Better After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Wyocena, Wisconsin.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before my twins were born because my sister used it and recommended it to me. I was so I could scarcely go about my daily work I was in such misery. But after I began taking the second bottle I was feeling lots better. I took three bottles and a half before I was confined and finished the bottle while I was in bed. I got up feeling fine and have taken care of the twins alone ever since. I recommend the Vegetable Compound highly and will sing its praises in the future."—Mrs. IDA GERRITZ, Wyocena, Wis.

It is remarkable how many cases have been reported similar to this one. Many mothers are left in a weakened and run-down condition after child-birth, and for such mothers the care of the baby is well-nigh impossible. Not only is it hard for the mother, but the child itself will indirectly suffer.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an excellent tonic for the mother both before and after child-birth. It is prepared from medicinal roots and herbs, and does not contain any harmful drugs. It can be taken in safety by nursing mothers.

Calumet Nut Cookies

¼ cup butter
½ cup sugar
2 eggs
1 cup flour
1 level teaspoon baking powder
¼ cup chopped nuts
1 teaspoon vanilla

Cream butter and add sugar and eggs, well beaten. Sift flour and baking powder together. Add to first mixture; then add nuts and flavoring. Drop from a spoon on a greased baking sheet, leaving an inch space between them. Sprinkle with chopped nuts and bake in a hot oven (350° F.). This will make about two dozen cookies.

Permanent roads are a good investment —not an expense

Why America Must Have More Paved Highways

Almost every section of the United States is confronted by a traffic problem.

Month by month this problem is becoming more and more serious.

Hundreds of cars pass a given point every hour on many of our state and county roads. Downtown city streets are jammed with traffic.

Think, too, how narrow many of our roads are, and how comparatively few paved highways there are in proportion to the steadily increasing number of cars.

If the motor vehicle is to continue giving the economic service of which it is capable, we must have more Concrete highways and widen those near large centers of population.

Every citizen should discuss highway needs of his community with his local authorities.

Your highway officials will do their part if given your support.

Why postpone meeting this pressing need?

An early start means early relief.

PITY FOR HIM

SYNOPSIS. — Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr. John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Joan Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance. She is upset, through no fault of her own, and makes a trivial blunder at a critical moment. The patient dies and Doctor Lancaster accuses her of clumsiness. She is suspended, the action meaning the end of her hope of a career as a nurse. Without relatives or friends, and desperate, Joan, urged by her landlady, goes to Doctor Lancaster's office to ask him to overlook her blunder and reinstate her. She overhears a violent altercation between Doctor Lancaster and other men she does not see.

Chapter III

She found herself in a large, lighted room, with the sense of an institution, though it was well furnished. She saw the white enameled table, the glass case full of instruments, the empty court outside; then John Lancaster himself, alone, standing with bent head behind a chair, on which he was leaning.

As Joan entered an inner door began to open. Joan knew that the man with whom Lancaster had been quarreling was inside a room behind it. She dreaded lest he should come in; but suddenly the door closed.

She looked at Lancaster again. It was still quite light within the consulting room, but Lancaster, standing with his back to the window, was in silhouette, so that Joan could not see his face clearly.

"Well, madam?" he asked, raising his head.

"I came to speak to you about this morning," began Joan hurriedly. "It means—"

He indicated a chair. He was gazing at her with some embarrassment—Joan thought because of the scene in which he had just participated. "Tell me the trouble," he began, as she seated herself, drawing up his own chair toward hers.

Now Joan could see his face, and, to her astonishment, it did not bear the expression of the smirking bully whom she had seen that morning, nor yet of the man who had addressed another man in such terms as one might use to a slave. It was not an unkindly face. And it was unmistakably that of a sick man.

For a moment she remembered the stories told of his behavior in the operating theater, of the gentleness that seemed to transform the man, as if he possessed a dual personality. Then she was recalled to herself by Lancaster's repetition of his remark.

Joan rose up hastily. She realized that the doctor had mistaken her for a patient. Her face meant nothing to him, any more than her distress of the day had affected him. With a nervous movement she unfastened her cloak, disclosing her uniform.

"I am Miss Wentworth," she explained. "I came to tell you—I came to say—" Then, treading out her pride once more, "I came to ask if you won't reconsider your decision to suspend me. My work means everything to me. It is my life work, my vocation. I always wanted to be a nurse. I felt that it was my task to help alleviate suffering. Doctor Lancaster, apart from my own interests, I want to graduate to be able to help others. Won't you give me another opportunity?"

She spoke with her hands unconsciously clasped before her; the recollection of her earlier hopes, the thought of their frustration brought a quiver into her voice. When she stopped she saw that Lancaster was looking at her with obvious interest.

"Tell me about this morning," he said quietly.

"I had to come away without breakfast, and the fumes of the ether made me faint. I was nearly fainting when you asked me for the scalpel, and I couldn't see the tray. Indeed it was not the operation that made me ill. I have never been reprimanded before. The lady superintendent had told me several times that the hospital appreciated my work. So I hoped you would be willing to overlook my blunder and let me graduate."

Lancaster looked at her with a singular expression that seemed to mask his thoughts. She could not tell how her plea had impressed him. When he spoke she was dumfounded by the harshness and casualness of his tone.

"Why have you come to my house about this?" he asked. "This is not my hour for seeing patients—I mean people."

"I am sorry if I did wrong!" cried the girl. "But if you knew how much it means to me—"

"I can do nothing for you now," said Lancaster.

The voice was harsh again, but curiously flat, as if he was trying to restrain his emotions, hold himself in; as if he was afraid. . . . but afraid of what? Not of his anger.

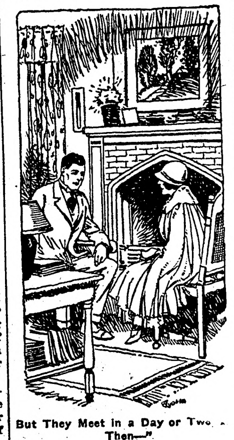
Joan was standing in front of him, and even then the appearance of the man had something pathological about it to her mind. There was not the least jauntiness or self-consciousness about him. He looked older than in the morning, depressed, and certainly ill. His manner indicated that of one just aroused from sleep. His eyes were very bright, and his face unnaturally pale. He was pressing his thumb and finger firmly against the arm of the chair, as if for support. Joan remembered the stories of his drinking habits. But she saw at once that Lancaster had not been drinking. She had attended too many alcoholic patients at the hospital not to be sure of that.

"Doctor Lancaster, my dismissal means the loss of all my prospects. I came to ask if you won't inquire about my record and then give me another chance," said Joan. "And I am sorry if I came at an inconvenient time; but now that I am here I must request the courtesy of a final answer. I shall not come to you again."

"I can't answer you," said Lancaster, as if speaking in his sleep. "In the interests of discipline—it is impossible to answer you now."

Joan turned away. The flat refusal stunned her. And there was something preposterous about Lancaster's manner, perfectly incomprehensible to her. What was the matter with him? Why did the room turn round and round? Suddenly she felt Lancaster's hand on her arm. He was supporting her, helping her into a chair; and through the fog she saw a look of concern on his face.

"Now sit quiet, Miss Wentworth," he said in a new tone of decision. "Sit quiet, I tell you. Wait a minute, and, when you are feeling composed let me see if I can't help you."



But They Meet in a Day or Two, and Then—"

He drew his chair toward hers again and leaned toward her.

"I have not been feeling well," he explained. "I was not myself when I discharged you this morning. When I refused to discuss the matter with you it was because it is an invariable rule that the nurses are not supposed to come to my house. Outside the hospital I see nobody connected with the hospital. I'll see what I can do. The matter will have to go before the board now, I suppose. Why did you come away without your breakfast? Why didn't your folks insist on your having something to eat?"

"I have no people," answered Joan. "My mother died nearly two years ago. We came here from Lucas county, and she was taken ill soon after our arrival. I hoped to get my diploma and have my profession."

"You had no breakfast, and I discharged you for fainting, and your diploma means everything to you," said Lancaster slowly, clasping his hands as if in thought. Then, with a decisive, odd gesture, he leaned still nearer Joan and dropped his voice as he spoke as if he was afraid that the man in the next room would hear him.

"Remember this as long as you live," he said. "In this life people are not penalized for incapacity; they are punished for being unfortunate. Are you unlucky, Miss Wentworth?"

"I—why, yes, I suppose I must be," she answered, looking at Lancaster in growing astonishment, mixed with a little fear.

"And you have sympathy for the unfortunate? You—you said something like that just now—about wishing to be of help to others. Are you loyal and staunch?"

"I hope I am," said Joan uneasily.

"If one is loyal to others, one does not fear one's own misfortunes," said Lancaster. "They rise out of some fault or weakness—if one follows the trail far enough back into one's self. I've learned that, heaven knows! Miss Wentworth," he ended suddenly, "would you consider a temporary position while your case is under investigation by the board?"

"But they meet in a day or two, and then—"

"Would you consider it," repeated Lancaster, "if you could be of greater service than you know? Suppose I said to you as I am saying now, that you seem to me the best suited, by loyalty and good will, to help, of all the nurses I know, would you accept?"

"Then, Doctor Lancaster," cried Joan triumphantly, "if you have that opinion of me you have no excuse for not getting the board to reinstate me."

The man faltered as she looked at him. He was no longer terrible to her. He seemed to have put off some hateful armor that he assumed, and revealed weakness that none had suspected. Pity for him, a vast and heartfelt pity whose cause she was unable to divine, began to stir the girl's heart.

"I pledge you my word to do all I can for you," said Lancaster. "But you must help me in turn. I need you for this purpose. I want you to go into the country for a month. It will rest you, too, and you are run down. Have you ever heard of the Lancaster institute in Drexham county?"

"I think so," answered Joan, rather doubtfully.

"It is a hobby of mine. My father established it twenty-five years ago for the hill people, but the funds became squandered, and it is not in good shape. However, it does some good, and it is the only place of its kind within a score of miles. Doctor Jenkins is in charge, and I—I run down there every now and then to keep him up to the mark. There is a matron there. The cases comprise a little light surgical work occasionally, an alcoholic or two after paydays for the mining element, pneumonia in its season, and—yes, there's a demented woman there, but she won't come under your care. It's in the hill country. How would you like to go?"

"I don't know what to say," answered the girl.

"But you have no attachments in Avonmouth?" he asked, looking hard at her.

"Nobody. But, Doctor Lancaster, all my thoughts are bent on my reinstatement."

"I'll do my best for you if you will help me out with this case," he answered. "And you will get strong in a month and take up your work again with a light heart. You will have a small remuneration, and your fare, of course. You'll go?"

"I'll go, then," answered Joan.

"Then listen to me," he said, again speaking with lowered voice and glancing back in apprehension toward the inner door. "I shall not see you before you start, but I rely on you. You must leave on the nine o'clock train tomorrow morning. And you must speak to nobody about this undertaking."

"I shall say nothing, Doctor Lancaster. And I have to thank you with all my heart."

He frowned at her. And the curious indecision in his manner, the furtiveness of the man, which still disquieted the girl, was in extraordinary contrast to Lancaster's appearance in the theater that morning, to everything that she had associated with him. She was utterly bewildered.

As she rose Lancaster came very close to her, and now his voice was little more than a whisper.

"I'll wire to Mrs. Fraser, the matron," he said, "and I'll have the buggy meet you at the station—Lancaster station, Miss Wentworth. And I wish—"

But the door opened, and the white attendant slouched into the room. He stared insolently at Joan. "Doctor Lancaster—" he began.

"I'll see you when I am alone, Myers," answered Lancaster.

"Doctor Lancaster, will you please give me a few moments of your time," said the man urgently; and underneath the plea Joan seemed to see the insolence and contempt in his heart. Suddenly the idea came to her that this must be the man whom Lancaster had berated in the consulting room.

She went out, and as soon as she was in the passage she heard the attendant begin to address Lancaster in excited tones. Then the inner door opened. She fancied there were three men, after all. Somebody was speaking in high tones; and then Lancaster's deep, booming voice rang out.

> Apparently Dr. Lancaster has a dual personality. Is his offer genuine? Or is it a trap for the handsome nurse?

The Story of Minnesota's Grand Old Farm Paper

FARM, STOCK & HOME needs no introduction. Its first issue dates back to the pioneer days of 1884, and wherever you go throughout the great Northwest you will find subscribers who have been with FARM, STOCK & HOME from the very beginning boosting and praising them for their unselfish service toward the advancement and betterment of farming and dairying for a period of 40 years.

Farm, Stock & Home
The Northwest's Foremost Farm Paper
MINNEAPOLIS March 15th, 1924

From its very beginning FARM, STOCK & HOME has championed only good causes; it has been the bitter enemy of all fraudulent schemes, and has started many movements in the interest of farmers. This paper put the Northwest in the corn belt with its prize acre yield contest of 1911-12; it founded the first farmers' co-operative creamery and thus established a system of double profits in dairying. And today their Editorial Staff is as active as ever before in making this the best and most interesting farm paper ever printed.

Farming is a business, and every business must have a sort of research bureau to study its problems. The banker has his statistical reports, the manufacturer his technical journal, and the farmer should look to the best farm paper for sound and logical advice. No farm paper in this area can claim so long and continuous a record of service as FARM, STOCK & HOME has. They are constantly searching the world over for knowledge and information that farmers and dairymen should have, and every issue of this paper is chock-full of interesting and instructive reading matter.

GREAT NORTHERN VALUATION SHOWS NO "WATER"

In response to assertions that railroad stocks were watered and that the investments recorded in the companies' books were inflated, Congress, in 1913, by the LaFollette Act, directed the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine, among other things, the cost of reproduction new, cost of reproduction less depreciation, and the value of the various railroads in the United States.

The corporate assets of the Great Northern Company consist of two classes of property: One is the physical property used for transportation purposes and located in the United States; the other consists of investments in stocks and bonds of other companies, including lines located in Canada, and other miscellaneous property used for non-carrier purposes. The Interstate Commerce Commission recently has completed its tentative valuation of the first of these, that is, the physical property used for transportation purposes and located in the United States. It has not valued the second class of property because not required to do so by the terms of the Act.

The value as found by the Commission for Great Northern properties used for transportation purposes and located in the United States as of June 30, 1915, was as follows:

Total used 395,353,655.00

In arriving at these figures, the Interstate Commerce Commission deducted $65,140,474.00 from the cost of reproduction new on account of assumed depreciation. The Company, of course, contends that the depreciation of certain parts of the properties, such as the aging of its roadbed, is more than offset by the appreciation of the property as a whole, as it is well known that a railroad property in use for several years is better and worth more for transportation purposes than a newly built property.

Included in the second class property not valued by the Commission is:
604 miles of railroad in Canada.
Nearly 49 per cent of the Stock of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.
One-half of the stock of the Spokane, Portland & Seattle Railway.
Also the stocks of some other smaller railway companies, and the stocks of coal, lumber, land and other subsidiary corporations.

The investment in securities not valued by the Commission amounts to $227,076,312.83. Other property not used for transportation purposes amounts to $24,315,418.31, so that the Commission's value on the first class of property, plus the value of the second class of property, which the Commission did not value, amounts to $643,132,033.14.

Since the valuation date, June 30, 1915, there has been added $104,881,141.26 which brings the total value of Great Northern property to July 1, 1924, up to $748,013,174.40. The total par value of stocks and bonds of the Great Northern as of July 1, 1924, was $563,258,165.16, showing an excess of $184,755,009.24 of value above the total capitalization. The following table makes these statements clear:

PROPERTY		CAPITALIZATION
Portion of owned property valued by the Commission as of June 30, 1915	$391,740,302.00	Great Northern Stock	$249,477,150.00
Stocks, bonds and other properties not valued by Commission as of June 30, 1915	227,076,312.83	Great Northern Bonds	313,781,015.16
Other property as of June 30, 1915	24,315,418.31	EXCESS OF PROPERTY OVER CAPITALIZATION ON JULY 1, 1924	184,755,009.24
Property added since June 30, 1915	104,881,141.26
Total	$748,013,174.40	Total	$748,013,174.40

This furnishes the most conclusive answer to the charge of watered stock.

The Great Northern never did have and never will have a Dollar of Watered Stock

CITATION FOR HEARING ON PETITION FOR ADMINISTRATION.

Estate of Matt Larson.
State of Minnesota, County of Marshall.

IN PROBATE COURT

In the Matter of the Estate of Matt Larson—Decedent.

The State of Minnesota to Emma C. Larson, Hilmer Larson, Selma Sophia Manalis, Amanda Elizabeth Larson, Albert Larson, Emanuel Larson, Willie Larson, Ludvig Larson, Leonard Larson and Lygia Myrtle Larson, and all persons interested in the granting of administration of the estate of said decedent: The petition of Emma C. Larson having been filed in this Court, representing that Matt Larson, then a resident of the County of Marshall, State of Minnesota, died intestate on the 8th day of June, 1924; and praying that letters of administration of his estate be granted to Emma C. Larson, and the Court having fixed the time and place for hearing said petition: THEREFORE, YOU, AND EACH OF YOU, are hereby cited and required to show cause, if any you have, before this Court at the Probate Court Rooms in the Court House, in the City of Warren in the County of Marshall, State of Minnesota, on the 14th day of November, 1924, at two o'clock P. M., why said petition should not be granted.

WITNESS, The Judge of said Court, and the Seal of Said Court, this 17th day of October, 1924.

PETER H. HOLM,
(Court Seal) Probate Judge.
W. O. BRAGGANS,
Attorney for Petitioner,

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage containing a Power of Sale, by reason of which default said Power of Sale has become operative, and the Administrator of the Assignee of the Mortgagee hereinafter named is authorized to declare the whole sum due and he hereby does declare said sum due, which mortgage was duly executed by Engebret S. Moe, a single man, Mortgagor, to D. B. Bakke, Mortgagee, dated April 23rd, 1919, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 25th day of April, A. D. 1919, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 93 of Mortgages, on page 252.

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said D. B. Bakke, Mortgagee, to Deposit Bank of Winona, Winona, Minnesota, by written assignment, dated May 17th, 1919, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 24th day of May, A. D. 1919, at 10 o'clock A. M., in Book 86 of Mortgages, on page 270.

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Deposit Bank of Winona, Winona, Minnesota, to Bridget Ryan, by written assignment, dated September 13th, A. D. 1919, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 17th day of September, A. D. 1924, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 110 of Mortgages, on page 624.

And whereas, the said Administrator of the Estate of said Bridget Ryan, the assignee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms of said mortgage and the Power of Sale therein contained; and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice, the sum of Thirty-six Hundred Dollars ($3600.00), with accumulated interest from the 23rd day of April, 1921, at the rate of six per cent per annum; and whereas, the said Power of Sale has become operative and no action or proceedings having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz:

Lots One (1) and Two (2), the Southeast Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (SE¼-SW¼) and the Southwest Quarter of the Southeast Quarter (SW¼SE¼) of Section Twenty-five (25), the Southwest Quarter of the Southeast Quarter (SW¼SE¼) of Section Thirty-three (33), all in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North of Range Forty-two (42) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, and,

The North Half of the Southeast Quarter (N½SE¼) and the North Half of the Southwest Quarter (N½SW¼) of Section Thirty-one (31) in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North of Range Forty-one (41) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, containing a total of Three Hundred Thirty-six and 55-100 (336.55) acres more or less, according to the United States Government survey thereof, all in Marshall County and State of Minnesota.

Which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the Front door of the County Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State on the 18th day of November, 1924, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the amount then due on said mortgage and interest, together with the costs and disbursements of such sale and Seventy-five Dollars attorneys fees stipulated as attorneys fees in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

Dated September 29, 1924.

JAMES P. TOVEY, as Administrator of the Estate of Bridget Ryan deceased, the said Bridget Ryan being the Assignee of Mortgagee.

W. J. SMITH,
Attorney for Administrator of the Estate of Bridget Ryan deceased, the said Bridget Ryan being the Assignee of Mortgagee.

Creamery Notice!

The Red River Dairymen's convention will be held in Thief River Falls November 19th and 20th, which will be on Wednesday and Thursday of next week.

This convention is one of the best of its kind. Some very good speakers are listed on the program and I assure you that a day or two spent in listening to them will broaden your view point on the different topics you have before you on the farm.

One of the big features of this convention is the different prizes they give out. The one we are mostly interested in, since the convention is being held so near at home, is the prize they offer to the creamery that has the largest number of patrons in attendance. Last year we captured 3rd prize and went 65 miles to do it—this year we should try to do as well or better. Always aim to do better, so I feel that we should make up our minds to bring back 1st prize. Are you with us? Let us hear from you, and be ready to tell us you are one of the many that are going. When you enter the convention hall dont forget to register your name and address. Your address in this case should be the name of the town where you do your business, and forget all about your R. F. D. route.

Respectfully,
P. L. Anderson

Valuable Hints to Patrons

Delivering Cream to our Creamery

Pasteurization is very important, yet to have it done in an inefficient way is worse than not at all. In view of the fact we ask the cooperation and urge upon all patrons to try and do their share to help us. First—You must try and bring a 1st grade cream and have same delivered in the forenoon if possible. Second—Help us to get our average test 30 per cent or better. Sweet cream can be pasteurized more efficiently than sour, and high testing cream will save you more money for the reason that with a low testing cream it is impossible to churn it without considerable butterfat being drained out with the buttermilk.

MYERS

SYNOPSIS. — Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr. John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Joan Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance. She is upset, through no fault of her own, and makes a trivial blunder at a critical moment. The patient dies and Doctor Lancaster accuses her of clumsiness. She is suspended, the action meaning the end of her hope of a career as a nurse. Without relatives or friends, and desperate, Joan, urged by her landlady, goes to Doctor Lancaster's office to ask him to overlook her blunder and reinstate her. She overhears a violent altercation between Doctor Lancaster and other men she does not see. Joan is struck by the favorable change in the appearance and demeanor of the doctor, recalling that at times in the hospital he has been gentle and thoughtful and at others supercilious and bullying. He tells her he can do nothing for her at the hospital, but offers her a position in a nursing institution in the country, telling her she can be of "great assistance" to him.

"You're a fool! You don't know when you are well off. I tell you, I wash my hands of you. This is final—"

Joan could not help but hear. And as she emerged into the passage, all the time hearing the sounds of the quarreling voices, Myers came hurrying past.

He did not see her. He ran to the door, flung it open, and rushed down the steps into the street. As he went along the passage the girl saw him staring right and left; then, as she came out, he saw her and went toward her. She knew that it was she whom he had been seeking.

"What was it Doctor Lancaster was saying to you, Miss Wentworth, before I came in?" he asked in his rasping tone.

Joan stared at him in astonishment. Now she realized that she had mistaken him; he was not a servant, but apparently a member of the doctor's household.

"Will you let me pass, please?" asked Joan, as he blocked the way.

"I want to know what the doctor was saying to you," repeated the man doggedly.

"Are you going to refuse me passage?" demanded the girl, flushing with anger.

He stepped aside with a sneer and a mock bow. "O, very well, if that's your attitude," he answered. "I shall find out."

Joan turned swiftly upon him. "I don't know who you are, but I shall complain of you to Doctor Lancaster," she said.

Myers looked at her and sneered and chuckled. Then, without a word, he went back into the doctor's room. And still the voices kept up their quarreling dialogue.

Joan found herself in the street in the twilight, and now the unreality of the absurd interview struck home to her. She tried to puzzle it out. Before she reached the boarding house she thought she had her clue.

That Lancaster, the terror of the nurses, should have been unable to promise immediate reinstatement, his evident good-will, his indecision and illness were explicable only in one way. The man Myers must be a relative, the third man perhaps a nephew. Lancaster had been supporting a worthless pair in idleness, and had turned on them in exasperation. That was the meaning of his look of illness, his preoccupation—the shock of some domestic discovery.

At any rate she was satisfied with some such solution. And she was certain that, if she pleased him with her mysterious mission, her reinstatement would follow. She went home happy, and Mrs. Webb read the news in her face the moment she opened the door.

"I knew it, my dear," she exclaimed with pleasure. "I knew that you could twist that old devil round your finger if you tried hard enough."

"Mrs. Webb, it was nothing of the kind," said Joan. "And Doctor Lancaster is one of the kindest of men. He's going to try to have his decision reversed, and—Mrs. Webb, he is sending me to a sanitarium, on a case, in the meantime"

She checked herself, suddenly remembering Lancaster's caution. But Mrs. Webb took the girl to her wide bosom and kissed her.

"You little humbug!" she said.

"Mrs. Webb," cried Joan, scandalized. "if you knew—"

But when she was upstairs she sat down suddenly and faced her conscience. What impression of herself had she given in the consulting room?

She did not know. This scene, like that of the morning, had become blurred in her memory, and time had begun to flow very fast after the slowness of her twenty-two years. Certainly stranger things had happened that day than at any time since her mother's death!

She leaned out of the window. She suddenly remembered that the institute was not many miles from her old home. It would be almost going home —and on the morrow. Joy leaped into her heart.

Then she saw something that for an instant chilled the blood in her veins. Across the street, leaning against the park railings and looking up at the house, was a short, square-built figure of a man wearing a hard hat. She could not distinguish the face, but she thought it was Myers. And she remembered his threat.

What did it mean? Bewildered, she turned into her room again. She half regretted now that she was to go to Lancaster.

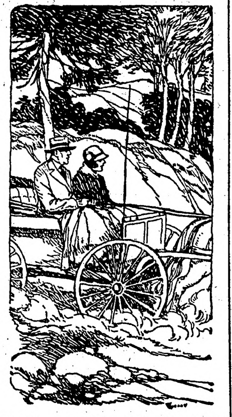
But in the morning she dismissed the incident from her mind as a fantasy.

Chapter IV

At half-past seven in the evening Joan descended from the train at Lancaster station, after an all-day ride.

It was like going home. Joan could not see her village, which was on a branch line, but at Medlington she was only four miles away. There were the same misty mountains, breaking the horizon line, the same small, straggling towns, the same fragrance of the deep forests, bringing back to her those remembrances which a chance odor suddenly unlooses, as at the touch of some magician's stave. The two years that she had spent at Avonmouth seemed to slip out of her recollection.

As the afternoon flew by the distant mountains changed into a semicircle of irregular heights. Now the train was climbing into the foothills. It was a lonely land. This was further in the back country than Joan had ever been. The villages were becoming mere clusters of negro cabins. There had been two changes of trains and each time the coach became shabbier and more disreputable, and more impregnated with tobacco smoke. The character of Joan's fellow travelers changed as well. They were uncouther, they wore chin beards and rough store suits; they sat perspiring and collarless, the soft hats pulled over their foreheads. But she looked at them with the loving appreciation of her own people that was in her heart, and they, in the presence of the pretty girl who was traveling alone, displayed the innate courtesy of the Southerner.



The Horse Breaking Into a Short Gallop Near Every Summit.

The sun descended; it was gilding the whole land with level rays of gold and dancing on the horizon like a red ball when the train pulled into Lancaster, the last station before Millville, the terminus. Joan got down and looked about her.

The station was a tiny place and seemed deserted. The booking office was closed. In the waiting room, appearing almost to fill it, was a stout negress with a dozen parcels; from the wicker sides of one two hens' heads with blinking eyes protruded. Outside a ramshackle buggy, with a lean chestnut horse attached, was drawn up to the edge of the muddy road.

A well-dressed young mountain boy in a hard-felt hat was standing beside it. As Joan came out of the station he turned toward her, took off his hat, and bowed.

"Miss Wentworth?" he inquired, in a well-bred tone.

"Yes. You are from the institute?"

"Yes, Miss Wentworth. Mrs. Fraser will be expecting you." He looked beyond her, and Joan, turning, perceived to her discomfiture the man Myers, in his hard hat. He must have traveled up in the train with her.

Myers came forward, taking off his hat grudgingly. "Miss Wentworth, I'm sorry if I annoyed you last night," he said. "I ought to have explained to you that I'm the secretary of the institution. I guess my manners ain't very good, but I meant no harm."

Joan, who had witnessed his presence with consternation, now felt a sudden reaction from her fears. Of course, Myers' explanation made the situation intelligible.

She bowed, and he turned to the boy. "You can take Miss Wentworth up," he said. "I'll find a buggy somewhere."

As there was only room for two in the buggy, Joan did not demur to the proposition. She stepped in, the young man holding out his hand to guard her dress from the wheel. Joan glanced at the man with momentary interest. He had the appearance of a gentleman, and the manners of one. There was no hint of either servility or presumption, and yet there was a sort of independence about the man which fitted him admirably. He flicked the horse, and the buggy began to crawl out of the station yard along the single street of a tiny village, straggling uphill. It was a white village, but clusters of shanties a little back among the pines betrayed the presence of the black element. There was a store or two, their fronts plastered with tobacco and baking powder advertisements, and in front of each stood a gaunt, yellow-faced hillman, chewing and gazing after the buggy with unanimated face.

"This is Lancaster?" asked Joan.

"Yes, Miss Wentworth."

"The people here look depressed."

"There's a good deal of sickness, Miss Wentworth. Hookworm, and what they used to call malaria. But there isn't any malaria here; it's bad diet—salt pork and soda biscuits. And there's pellagra; it's been here for generations, but it wasn't till last year that the medical commission discovered it."

The coachman's knowledge might have been ludicrous in most men of his class, but there was nothing ridiculous in the grave, refined face of the young mountaineer. He must have picked up some knowledge at the institute, thought Joan.

"But it's healthy up in the hills, Miss Wentworth," he added. "This village is Millville. They used to grow cotton in the valley over yonder, but the frost killed the crops three years ago, and the mill fell into ruin. Quite a little water power in that stream."

The buggy ascended a steeper grade, the horse breaking into a short gallop near every summit, and then resuming its leisurely crawl.

"That's the institute, Miss Wentworth," the coachman continued, pointing toward a straggling building on a little plateau. It had the appearance of a large but rather dilapidated farmhouse. "It's three miles by the road," he added, "but less than a mile over the hills."

The horse had stopped to gain breath again. Looking back, Joan saw a white line that crept upward over the rocky slopes almost direct from the station to the building. Half way up was a little speck of black that seemed to move. Joan knew it was Myers' hard hat, his body being hidden from view among the bushes. She shuddered slightly; the man was very repugnant to her.

The horse went on again, the road winding uphill through pastures gay with buttercups and white with little branched asters. It dipped between hedgerows pink with meadowsweet. The sun had set, but its light still gilded the hills. The scene was very peaceful. Now the institute seemed to swing out from among the undulations of the mountain flanks immediately in front of them.

The buggy came to a standstill before the long wooden building, which was of unshingled boards and very much the worse for weather. It had not been painted for years, and two windows in one wing were broken. A patch of weedy, unmown lawn extended between what had once been hedges, but were now mere tangles of undergrowth. Nearby was a large inclosure in which were a few chickens, picking for grains of corn, and a cow at pasture turned her head and gazed at them placidly.

The door opened and a pleasant-looking woman came forward.

"How do you do, Miss Wentworth," she said. "I am the matron, Mrs. Fraser. Doctor Lancaster telegraphed about your coming. I'll show you your room, and your supper will be ready in a few minutes."

Joan descended. The driver, who had leaped to the ground, held his hand over the wheel, but did not offer it to her. Then he re-entered the buggy, and, rather to Joan's surprise, drove off along the road by which they had ascended.

> The mystery deepens, with Myers the secretary of the institution. Is Joan in for a disagreeable adventure?

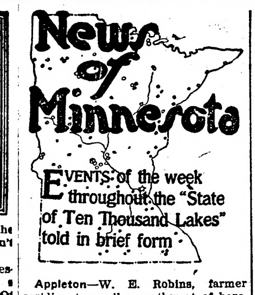
In parts of Africa and southern Asia the cowrie, a small shell, is used for coin.



EVENTS of the week throughout the "State of Ten Thousand Lakes" told in brief form

Appleton—W. E. Robins, farmer residing two miles southwest of here, was gored to death by a bull while taking the animal to market.

Rush City—Mrs. S. C. Johnson, mother of Curtis M. Johnson, gubernatorial candidate in the June primaries, died in her home here. Mrs. Johnson was 65 years old.

Hibbing—Playfully pointing a shot gun at Mary Mikovich, nine years old, Frank, her 12-year-old brother, pulled the trigger and fatally injured her on their farm north of Nashwauk.

Hibbing—At a cost of 13 cents per head, Hibbing entertained 6,500 tourists the last summer, according to figures given out by the park superintendent.

Mankato—Mrs. T. C. Collins of Windom was elected president of the Mankato deanery of the Episcopal church here at the closing session of the annual convention of that organization.

Stillwater—Stephen W. Powell, 83 years old, former department commander of the Minnesota G. A. R., died at his farm home at Grant, near here. Death resulted from heart disease.

Hoffman—Two farmers living in this district have just brought in strawberries to the market. It is very unusual for Minnesotans to be marketing strawberries in November, merchants here say.

Crosby—The final chapter of the Milford mine disaster of February 5 was written with the recovery of the body of Arvid Lahti, last of the 41 miners who lost their lives in Minnesota's greatest mine tragedy.

Kirkhoven—Funeral services were conducted here for Mrs. Axel Wallstrom and her 2 year old daughter, Marjorie, who were killed in an automobile accident four miles southwest of town.

Fairmont—Vandals broke into a district school near here, tore the curtains from the windows, tipped over the desks, scattered the textbooks and threw an American flag into the school yard.

Faribault—Three persons are reported to have been burned to death in a fire in the village of Shieldsville, near here. The fire is said to have destroyed a frame residence there in which the persons burned had been sleeping.

Walker—John L. Morrison, editor of the Ripsaw, was convicted of criminal libel and sentenced to 90 days in the Cass county jail at Walker, upon complaint of Judge Bert Jamison of the probate court of Cass county.

Northfield—St. Olaf College celebrated its fiftieth anniversary with a combined homecoming and general program of music and addresses, as well as a football game between St. Olaf and Luther College and several class reunions in the afternoon.

Claremont—Chris Harris, who managed an alleged lottery in which he sold printed postcard "pictures" of his farm near here and "threw in" a ticket with a chance on the farm, which he was "to give away," was found guilty of conducting a lottery in the district court at Mantorville.

Northfield—L. W. Boe, president of St. Olaf College, has gone to New York, on his way to Gothenberg, Sweden, where he will attend a meeting of the Lutheran World Council. He is one of two delegates from America, the other being Dr. J. E. Emerald of New York.

Duluth—Having a premonition of death a month ago, Mrs. Marie Malleck, 82 years old, came from her home three miles from the city to order a coffin from a Duluth undertaker and to make her simple funeral arrangements. She was found dead in her home the next day.

Minneapolis — More than 500,000 hens clucking about the chicken yards within a 40 mile radius of the Twin Cities are leagued together with five swift trucks, to supply nearly $1,000,000 a year in eggs and dressed poultry to the Midway plant of a new farmer's co-operative in Minnesota.

Little Falls—A canning factory for this city is now assured, according to R. M. Sanford, president of the Little Falls Canning Company. It is the company's intention to get the factory built and completed by June of next year.

Morgan—Norbert Tower, 12 year old boy, died from internal injuries as the result of being attacked by a cow on the farm of his father near here. The boy had gone to the barn to see a young calf. When he approached it the mother attacked him, crowding him against the manger.

Duluth—For the first time in the history of St. Louis county, a shipment of vegetables has been made to the Chicago market. In the shipment were six carloads of cauliflower and two cars of mixed vegetables.

Duluth—Challenging critics of present day youth who condemn boys and girls as "wild, scatter-brained and dangerous to the future of the country," 500 representatives of 15,000 members of Minnesota parents and teachers associations went on record as "backing the most promising generation of young people in the country's history."

Pine City—Dr. C. R. Swenson, a dentist of North Branch, was drowned in Cross lake inside the city limits here.

Fairmont—Elmer Garney, with 10 purebred Jersey Durocs, won the ton litter contest in Martin county, which has just ended.

Rochester—Construction of a new dam on the Rochester Milling company site will be started immediately following awarding of a contract.

Balaton—The Farmers and Merchants State Bank of Balaton is the name of the new institution which opened its doors for business.

Rochester—F. W. Peck, director of extension work, University Farm, St. Paul, was the principal speaker at the Rochester Junior Livestock show.

Tower—The first hunting fatality of the season occurred when Edward Tekantz, 18 years old, of Soudan, was accidentally shot while hunting in the woods.

Duluth—Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Cleveland, were killed when a New York Central train struck their automobile at a crossing near Stryker, O.

Rochester—The Rochester Manufacturers Association was organized by 16 to 25 manufacturers, who participated in an exhibit here.

New Ulm—Nearly 5,000 gallons of gasoline were run into the street here when boys broke a lock and opened a valve at the storage tanks of the Radke Independent Oil company.

Montevideo—The Kiwanis Club and the Commercial Club have pledged their support to the annual Chippewa County Crop Improvement Show, here in December.

Springfield—Springfield will have one of the finest municipal skating rinks in southern Minnesota if present plans of the board of education are fulfilled.

Sleepy Eye—Trapped in a burning chicken house, Lloyd, 4 years old, and Lenice Johnson, 6, were burned to death on a farm eight miles north of here. Their parents are Mr. and Mrs. Julius Johnson.

Rochester—A combined city hall and auditorium, to be loacted at the head of Mayo park, just east of the Great Western depot, is the solution to the city hall problem proposed by Dr. W. J. Mayo.

Faribault—The city council has authorized the city auditor to advertise for bids on a proposed bond issue of $53,000. The money will be used for new fire apparatus and the waterworks system.

Rochester—Citizens of Rochester apparently are opposed to the proposed purchase of the Co-operative building to convert it into a city hall. In a test vote those against the proposition ran approximately 4 to 1.

Winnebago—A large number of farmers of this section and business men here have become interested in securing a canning factory for Winnebago and are pushing a campaign to raise necessary funds.

Minneapolis—Fellowship, co-operation and membership were stressed at the annual "football night" dinner dance of the Minnesota department of the American Legion, attended by buddies from all parts of Minnesota.

Lanesboro—Bankers of Fillmore county have been successful in their efforts to raise $2,500 as a reward for the "arrest, conviction or capture of any person or persons burglarizing, robbing or attempting to burglarize any bank in Fillmore county."

Crookston—J. C. Bucklen brought in a branch broken from his raspberry bushes which was loaded with ripe berries. Mr. Bucklen says he has two acres of bushes in full bearing and is getting berries from them every day.

Minneapolis—A tong war, which has spread terror among Chinese throughout the East flared up in Minneapolis when Wong Si Wing, owner of a laundry, was shot and seriously wounded by a mysterious Chinese assailant.

Pipestone—Dr. E. P. Lyon, dean of the medical school at the University of Minnesota, has been selected to give the principal address at the ceremonies connected with the opening of the new Ashton memorial hospital of this city.

Litchfield—Business men of Litchfield have sent to President Coolidge a telegram, setting forth the fitness and qualification and urging the appointment of Colonel C. H. March as secretary of agriculture, to succeed the late Secretary Wallace.

Jackson—Mrs. Margaret Otterbein, believed to be the oldest woman in Minnesota, is dead. Mrs. Otterbein celebrated her 104th birthday. She came to America from Germany in 1888 and had made her home here for the last 24 years.

Minneapolis—Bodies of three men, who met death while on a fishing and hunting trip, were found by deputy sheriffs at Twin Lakes in Brooklyn Center township, Hennepin county The dead are: Jonas M. Dahl, Aslak Tonstad and Bernhard Hanson.

Minneapolis — Minnesota university dedicated its new electrical building which was built at a cost of $375,000.

Willmar—Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Segerstrom are 92 and 89 years of age. They are married 66 years and have lived in Minnesota 52 years. Mr. Segerstrom served 17 years in the Swedish army.

Fergus Falls—Thousands of farmers and other citizens residing in the surrounding territory came to Fergus Falls for big barbecue which was a feature of the first annual harvest festival and corn show under the direction of the Fergus Falls Commercial Club.

Hibbing—Municipal Judge Brady, forced for a second time within a year by a physician whose name is withheld, on a charge of driving an automobile while intoxicated, fined him $25 and costs and ordered him not to drive his own or any other automobile for a period of six months.

Troubled With Bronchitis?
Christine, N. Dak.—"I read about the 'Golden Medical Discovery' in the papers and thought I would try it. I was told by others it was such a wonderful medicine. I was attending high school but had to quit as my nerves went back on me. Then I caught an awful cold and it turned into bronchitis. I started taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I used about four boxes of the tablets when I was entirely well. For my part I can say that Dr. Pierce's medicines are wonderful."—Miss Asta Pederson. All medicine dealers. Tablets or liquid.

HOUSEWORK NOT DRUDGERY
For Women In Good Health
Read How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Changed Conditions For These Housewives

Back Don't Bother Me Now
Lincoln, Nebraska. — "My back would bother me so and when I had to do any heavy lifting it made me sick to my stomach with the pains in my back. I have my housework to do and four babies to take care of so when I heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I took it and I feel better. My back don't bother me and I can eat more and work. I do all my housework and washing for six in the family. I will tell other women to take the Vegetable Compound and you may publish my letter."—Mrs. CHARLES F. DOLEZAL, 1201 Garber Ave., Lincoln, Nebraska.

Felt Better At Once
Volga City, Iowa.—"I will tell you what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me. I was all run down and could hardly be on my feet. I was so cold I could not keep warm. I had numb feelings and then heat flashes would pass over my body. I had severe pains in my sides and was very nervous. I saw your advertisement in the newspapers so I thought I would try your medicine. My husband got me a bottle of the Vegetable Compound and I began to feel better as soon as I started taking it. I have taken it off and on for three years now. I keep house and do all my work for my husband and two little boys and make my garden. I feel fine and I tell others what the medicine has done for me. I think it is the best medicine in the world for women."—Mrs. THOMAS GRINDLE, Volga City, Iowa.

Can Do Any Kind of Work
Fouke, Arkansas.—"I had the 'Flu' and after that I had a pain in my side and was not able to do my work I was so weak. I found an advertisement in a paper and it told what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound would do, and I took it. Now I can do any kind of work I want to. I think every family ought to keep it in the house all the time and I intend to do so."—Mrs. DORA PHILYAW, R.R. No. 2, Fouke, Arkansas.

Over 100,000 women have so far replied to our question, "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?"

98 per cent of these replies are "Yes."

This shows that 98 out of every 100 women who take this medicine for the ailments for which it is recommended are benefited by it.

This goes to prove that a medicine specialized for certain definite ailments—not a cure-all—can and does do good work. For sale by druggists everywhere.

Laxatives do not overcome constipation
LAXATIVES and cathartics provide temporary relief only. Their continued use leads to permanent injury. In time, says an eminent physician, an almost incalculable amount of harm is done by the use of pills, salts, mineral waters, castor oil and the like.
Physicians advise lubrication for Internal Cleanliness
Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.
Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.
Take Nujol regularly and adopt the habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

CHRISTIANSON AND SCHALL WINNERS

Defeat of Farmer-Labor Candidates Made Sure As Vote Is Reported.

Governor-Elect Christianson gave out a brief statement today, as follows:

> The votes of the Commonwealth have charged me with a great responsibility. That responsibility I shall endeavor to discharge by giving the state honest, efficient and economical administration of its affairs.
>
> The platform on which I ran constitute a contract with the people, a contract as binding as any contractual engagement. That platform means what it says and it shall be my purpose to abide by it in every act and decision.
>
> To the thousands of men and women who have loyally stod by me throughout the campaign I owe a debt which I can discharge only by deserving the confidence they have manifested. I cannot write or see all of them, but I want them to know that I remember and appreciate their efforts.

Minneapolis — Theodore Christianson Republican candidate for Governor, defeated Floyd Olson, Farmer Labor nominee and Carlos Avery, Democrat, at Tuesday's election by a plurality that will reach over 30,000 when the votes are all in.

With returns from 2758 precincts received up to noon Thursday, Christianson had 355,807, Olson 311,193 and Avery 40,901. The precincts yet to report will reduce Christianson's present lead to some extent, it was predicted, but he has made such a strong run in the rural sections of the state that his election was conceded late Wednesday by the opposition candidates.

Magnus Johnson Defeated.

In the United States Senatorial race, Magnus Johnson present senator, who was elected last year to complete the term of Senator Knute Nelson, deceased, is defeated by Thomas Schall, for the past several years Congressman from the Tenth Minnesota district. In returns from 2933 precincts out of the state's 3607, Schall had 351,111, Johnson 331,842 and Farrell, Dem., 45,701. The remaining precincts are expected to reduce Schall's lead, but it is predicted that he will have a final plurality of close to 20,000.

Republican State Ticket Wins.

The vote on the Republican state ticket with the exception of Governor, up to Thursday noon stood as follows:

Lieutenant governor, 2,399 precincts: Nolan (rep.), 285,794; Holmes (farmer-labor), 241,139; Schilplin (dem.), 31,846.

Secretary of state, 2,067 precincts: Holm (rep.), 271,297; Mrs. Stageberg (farmer-labor), 169,466; Halverson (dem.), 22,841.

State treasurer, 2,020 precincts: Rines (rep.), 228,709; Berg (farmer labor), 181,559; Reindl (dem.), 23,933

Attorney general, 2,125 precincts: Hilton (rep.), 231,106; Sullivan (farmer-labor), 197,787; Bell (dem.), 22,134.

Railroad and warehouse commissioner, 2,268 precincts: Matson (rep.) 266,078; Smith (farmer-labor), 220,749; Lanine (dem.), 28,210.

The present Supreme Court judges have a substantial lead on returns from 2,317 precincts, and probably are re-elected. The vote of these precincts stands:

Chief Justice—Samuel B. Wilson, 217,681; Albert Johnson 187,626.

Associate Justices (two to elect)—Andrew Holt, 180,212; Royal A. Stone, 165,658; W. A. Anderson, 147,450; Thomas Fraser, 135,803.

SORLIE WINS IN NO. DAKOTA

Coolidge Apparently Has Carried Flickertail State.

Fargo—President Coolidge continued to hold his margin over Senator R. M. La Follette in North Dakota.

Although the Wisconsin senator had made a large cut in the President's majority throughout last night when precincts from avowed La Follette strongholds were tabulated, Coolidge's majority today amounted to 10,926 votes with the returns in from 1,830 of North Dakota's 2,160 precincts.

At the same time with approximately the same precincts reporting A. G. Sorlie, Nonpartisan League candidate, held a lead of 5,739 over Halvor Halvorson, fusion candidate. With most of these returns coming from league territory, Sorlie is expected to increase his plurality during the day. Halvorson conceded Sorlie's election at 8 p. m. yesterday.

BROOKHART FEW AHEAD

Senatorial Race One of the Most Spectacular In Years.

Des Moines—Senator Smith W. Brookhart of Iowa had a lead of 40 votes over his democratic opponent, Daniel F. Steck of Ottumwa, on unofficial returns from all but three precincts in the state. Returns from 2,421 precincts out of 2,433 gave Brookhart 444,839; Steck 444,799. The missing precincts are in Lee county.

This possibility appeared as returns from the last 200 of the state's 2,418 precincts slowly cut down a lead for Steck which at one time mounted to more than 12,000 and brought forth a statement from Senator Brookhart that the Ottumwa attorney apparently had defeated him.

Gas Tax Amendment Wins

The vote on the Constitutional amendments in Minnesota was heavy, and indications are that several had carried. The "gas tax" amendment, the most important of all, has apparently carried by a big vote. opponent, U. S. G. Cherry.

MINNESOTA'S NEW GOVERNOR

Theodore Christianson, Dawson Newspaper Editor, Elected Governor of Minnesota On Tuesday.

NEW MINN. CONGRESSMEN

Republicans Hold Same Ratio In Minnesota Delegation.

Minneapolis — Congressional election returns available Thursday morning, although incomplete in some counts, apparently had settled the contests in all but one of the ten Minnesota districts.

That one was in the Eighth district, where Victor L. Power, Republican, was in a close race with William L. Carss, Farmer-Labor. The vote in 198 out of the 502 precincts in the district gave Power 15,938, and Carss 17,691.

Allen J. Furlow, Republican, has defeated Julius Reiter in the First district. The vote in 276 out of 288 precincts gave Furlow 40,018, and Reiter 27,439.

Frank Clague, Republican, has been re-elected in the second over Swanjord, Farmer-Labor, the vote in 352 out of 366 precincts being: Clague, 42,138; Swanjord, 25,192.

August H. Andresen, Republican, has defeated A. C. Welch, former Nonpartisan leaguer, and Farmer-Labor candidate, in the Third, formerly represented by Charles H. Davis. The vote in 250 out of 295 precincts was: Andresen, 33,585; Welch 24,765.

Keller Reelected.

Oscar E. Keller, Republican, with radical leanings, has been re-elected in the Fourth, over Daniel E. Lawler, Democrat. The vote, complete, was; Keller, 36,902; Lawler, 28,135.

Walter H. Newton, Republican, has been re-elected by an overwhelming majority over Albert G. Bastis, Farmer-Labor, in the Fifth. The vote complete, was; Newton, 67,814; Bastis, 36,723.

Harold Knutson, Republican has been re-elected in the Sixth over S. C. Shipstead, brother of Senator Shipstead. The vote in 290 out of 493 precincts give Knutson 31,570 and Shipstead 24,405.

O. J. Kvale, Farmer-Labor, has been re-elected in the Seventh, the old Volstead district, over Gunner Bjornson, Republican. The vote in 375 out of 386 precincts give Kvale 42,286, and Bjornson 30,443.

Knud Wefald, Farmer-Labor, has been re-elected in the Ninth, over F. A. Peterson, Republican. In 296 out of 542 precincts, the vote was: Wefald, 20,573; Peterson, 15,879.

Goodwin Succeeds Schall.

Godfrey G. Goodwin, Republican, has been elected in the Tenth to succeed Congressman Thomas D Schall. In 244 precincts Goodwin had 40,873, and George D. Brewer, Farmer Labor, 30,093.

The constitutional amendment calling for the prohibition of parochial schools in Michigan was defeated.

In Milwaukee Senator Victor E. Berger is facing defeat, and with only a few precincts to report is leading his Republican opponent by only three votes. Several of the unreported precincts are in anti-Berger territory.

LEAGUE TO HALT OPIUM EVIL

Nations to Designate Size of Supply Held Legitimate and Necessary.

Geneva—Delegates will meet here for the first of two international conferences which will attempt to solve the opium evil and, what is of more immediate interest to the American people, endeavor to set up machinery to check the illicit international traffic in habit-forming drugs.

The first conference will be restricted to those Far Eastern countries where opium smoking prevails and to countries that have possessions in the Far East where opium smoking is still permitted under The Hague convention of 1912. The particular object of this conference is to determine an estimate of the requirements of all these countries in raw opium destined for smoking so that the estimate may be passed along to the more general international conference, which will open at Geneva, November 17.

Washington, D. C.—Distinguished speakers will deliver messages to the eighth annual meeting of The National Co-operative Milk Producers' federation at Detroit, Mich. Among them is Senator Royal S Copeland of New York. Long a favorite among New York dairymen he will touch upon legislative problems in the coming Congress. Dr. C. W. Larson, chief of the new dairy bureau, U. S. Department of Agriculture, will present the international aspects of dairying, its relation to world markets and production trends.

Everything All Right

A well-known minister, famous for absent-mindedness, once met an old friend in the street and stopped to talk with him. When about to separate, the minister's face suddenly assumed a puzzled expression.

"Tom," he said, "when we met was I going up or down the street?"

"Down," replied Tom.

The minister's face cleared. "It's all right, then. I had been home to lunch."

Danish Farms Thrive

During the last few years the farmers of Denmark have been so prosperous that at least 50 per cent of all farms are now electrified. The average farm is about fifty to seventy-five acres. The farmers specialize in the raising of grain, sugar beets and fodder, as well as in dairying. Farm tenancy is negligible, the government encouraging, through loans, the policy of farm ownership. Most of the farms obtain their power from central plants, which are, to a large extent, owned cooperatively by the consumers. Electric power is used for lighting, threshing, grinding, feed cutting, pumping and for other farm tasks.

Quite So

A glib oil-stock salesman had just finished describing the glorious opportunities of his proposition to a prospective purchaser with the question: "What do you think about it?"

"I think," drawled the previously bitten man, "that there is just one thing that saves you from being a bare-faced liar."

"What is that?" asked the salesman.

"Your whiskers," was the reply.—Chicago Daily News.

Hark, Hark, the Lark!

A little daughter of the slums, on her first day in the country, saw a lark motionless, high in air, pouring forth its lovely music. She listened a moment, then she ran to the matron. "Oh, Miss May," she said, "there's a sparrow up there, and he can't git up and he can't git down, and he ain't doin' a thing but holler about it."

Lots of women get married before they can afford to.

Probably Not

"Poor fellow, he's gone to his reward." "Let us hope there are no questions asked."

Is Your Work Hard?
Is your work wearing you out? Are you tortured with throbbing backache—feel tired, weak and worn out? Then look to your kidneys! Many occupations tend to weaken the kidneys. Constant backache, headaches, dizziness and rheumatic pains result. One suffers annoying kidney irregularities; feels nervous, irritable and worn out. Don't wait! Use Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys. Workers everywhere recommend Doan's. They should help you, too. Ask your Neighbor!
A North Dakota Case
John Klandt, 915 Fourth St., W., Jamestown, N. D., says: "I was laid up for about a month with kidney trouble. My back ached day and night and I often lost my sleep. My kidneys acted too often and I had dizzy spells. After using two boxes of Doan's Pills, the trouble disappeared and I haven't been bothered since."

HOLT NEWS

Here is the best offer I have ever made to the subscribers of the News. This Aluminum Roaster is as fine a utensil as has ever been produced for the kitchen. It is made of 99% pure Alminum. I know that every housewife will be instantly impressed with this attractive offering, and I want to urge each and every one of my readers to send in their renewal subscription for a year at this time and procure the Aluminum Roaster as a free gift from the News. The supply is very limited so do not put off sending in your order. Do it today.

This round Aluminum Roaster was designed by a culinary artist for use by particular housewives. It is the most convenient roaster for chickens and small roasts. Easily cleaned; no sharp crevices to hold grease; Sunray finish inside, and cleans beautifully by merely wiping out with soap and water. Best workmanship. Extra heavy rims. Both sections fit perfectly. Note particularly offset handles which makes opening roaster very easy.

10 in. diameter; 5½ in. deep.

Made of 99% pure Aluminum by one of the largest manufacturers of kitchen utensils. A long life of hard service is assured in this Roaster. You can see for yourself that it is a finely made article of seamless Aluminum of sufficient heavy gauge to withstand hard and continuous wear. It is just the ideal size and shape. You will find many uses for it.

The Story of Minnesota's Grand Old Farm Paper

FARM, STOCK & HOME needs no introduction. Its first issue dates back to the pioneer days of 1884, and wherever you go throughout the great Northwest you will find subscribers who have been with FARM, STOCK & HOME from the very beginning boosting and praising them for their unselfish service toward the advancement and betterment of farming and dairying for a period of 40 years.

From its very beginning FARM, STOCK & HOME has championed only good causes; it has been the bitter enemy of all fraudulent schemes, and has started many movements in the interest of farmers. This paper put the Northwest in the corn belt with its prize acre yield contest of 1911-12; it founded the first farmers' co-operative creamery and thus established a system of double profits in dairying. And today their Editorial Staff is as active as ever before in making this the best and most interesting farm paper ever printed.

MINNEAPOLIS

Farming is a business, and every business must have a sort of research bureau to study its problems. The banker has his statistical reports, the manufacturer his technical journal, and the farmer should look to the best farm paper for sound and logical advice. No farm paper in this area can claim so long and continuous a record of service as FARM, STOCK & HOME has. They are constantly searching the world over for knowledge and information that farmers and dairymen should have, and every issue of this paper is chock-full of interesting and instructive reading matter.

Alfred Newton and family of McIntosh visited a few days the past week with Selmer Reierson and family.

Lester Barnes, Anton Nelson, Martin Olson, and Emil Johnson went to Duluth Tuesday to work in the iron mines.

Geo. Johnson was at Warren a couple of days last week. We are pleased to report that he is steadily gaining in health.

Misses Gladys and Verna Hagberg came home from Crookston last week Thursday. We are pleased to report that Verna is getting along as well as could be expected.

This week we publish the report of the Marshall County State Bank which shows that institution to have a steadily increasing business and to be in a sound financial condition.

The greater majority of us are more or less prone to find fault at times. Would it be well for us at this season of the year to make an inventory of the things we have to be thankful for?

Mrs. Risberg and son Walmer and Mrs. Chas. Hagglund visited last Thursday with Allie Werner and family who had just moved from Park River, N. Dak. onto the Turnlund farm at Radium.

Selmer Reierson returned last week Thursday night from Randen with a deer he had shot. Racine Olson, Ludwig Monson and Carl Hagen returned Saturday night with two deer. Deer have been quite plentiful this year and several cars have gone thru here with one or more deer on their running boards.

The men have organized a basket ball team and will practice every Wednesday night. The indications are that they will have a strong team and they are determined to win several games this winter. The school has rented the hall and will have practice games of basket ball every Monday and Thursday nights.

The farmer who wants to make money off his cows can find the time to test them during the winter months and find out whether they are money makers or just boarders.

Valuable Hints to Patrons
Delivering Cream to our Creamery

Pasteurization is very important, yet to have it done in an inefficient way is worse than not at all. In view of the fact we ask the cooperation and urge upon all patrons to try and do their share to help us. First— You must try and bring a 1st grade cream and have same delivered in the forenoon if possible. Second— Help us to get our average test 30 per cent or better. Sweet cream can be pasteurized more efficiently than sour, and high testing cream will save you more money for the reason that with a low testing cream it is impossible to churn it without considerable butterfat being drained out with the buttermilk.

SOMETHING HIDDEN

SYNOPSIS. — Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr. John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Joan Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance. She is upset, through no fault of her own, and makes a trivial blunder at a critical moment. The patient dies and Doctor Lancaster accuses her of clumsiness. She is suspended, the action meaning the end of her hope of a career as a nurse. Without relatives or friends, and desperate, Joan, urged by her landlady, goes to Doctor Lancaster's office to ask him to overlook her blunder and reinstate her. She overhears a violent altercation between Doctor Lancaster and other men she does not see. Joan is struck by the favorable change in the appearance and demeanor of the doctor, recalling that at times in the hospital he has been gentle and thoughtful and at others supercilious and bullying. He tells her he can do nothing for her at the hospital, but offers her a position in a nursing institution in the country, telling her she can be of "great assistance" to him. A man named Myers demands she tell him what the doctor had said to her. She denies him the information, and he covertly threatens her. At the institution, which is owned by Doctor Lancaster, Joan finds Myers. He tells her he is the secretary. She instinctively dislikes and fears him.

The girl, after a moment's hesitation, preceded Mrs. Fraser into the building. She saw a long corridor, with a number of doors on either side, and the stairs in front of her.

"You would like to see the building, Miss Wentworth?" asked the matron. "Or perhaps you are tired and would prefer to go to your room."

"No, I should like to see it. Have you many patients?"

"Only Mrs. Dana. She's always here, you know. There was a boy with a broken arm, but he left this morning. In winter, though, we're often crowded. It isn't much of a place, Miss Wentworth, but we do a little good. This is the doctor's apartment. He sleeps here; next door is the clinic, and next to that the operating room. Here we keep the supplies. This is my room. Mr. Myers, the secretary, has his room opposite the doctor's. This is the dining room, and here is the kitchen. Now I'll show you your room upstairs, Miss Wentworth."

The corridor above was a replica of the one below. At the head of the stairs a little passage branched off toward a large window in the wall, with a door to one side of it.

"Mrs. Dana occupies this room," said the matron. "Perhaps the doctor mentioned her?"

"Doctor Lancaster said something—"

"She is out of her mind, poor woman, but she is perfectly quiet. You see, Miss Wentworth, she is like an infant mentally. She will not trouble you. Excuse me a moment."

She drew a key from the bunch that hung at her waist and unlocked the door very softly, and with a certain furtiveness, Joan thought. Looking in, the girl saw a strikingly handsome woman of about seven and thirty years, seated in a chair beside a window, with a shawl over her knees. She was in a dressing gown, and her hair hung over her shoulders in two braids. She did not look up or stir as the matron entered, and Mrs. Fraser, after closing the door behind her, presently came out and locked it again.

"I'll show you your room now, Miss Wentworth," she said. "You will be alone on this floor except for Mrs. Dana, but you are not afraid of her?"

"Not in the least. Is she incurable?"

"Yes, quite, poor thing. She has sat in that chair all day for nearly three years."

"And never goes out?"

"Out? No, we don't let her out. It might excite her. But I am not supposed to speak about the cases. It's very sad, though. She comes of a very good family, and they neglected her when she was in trouble, Miss Wentworth, and she's as good as dead to everyone now. She never speaks, but I don't know whether she could. I've never heard her since I came here three years ago. This is the ward. And this is your room."

The open doors along the corridor had revealed clean little rooms with iron bedsteads and plain furniture; the room at the end of the passage, however, was well furnished, with a heavy new carpet and old mahogany furniture. Outside the window, through the twilight, appeared the distant mountains.

Joan, turning, was surprised to see Mrs. Fraser watching her intently. As their eyes met the matron lowered her own in some confusion. There was a furtiveness about her glance that momentarily revived Joan's uneasiness. It was a strange journey, and Doctor Lancaster's behavior had been strange. Then there was the man Myers. Joan felt a sudden sinking of the heart; she was almost regretful that she had come.

A colored maid brought up her suitcase.

"This is Lucy," said the matron. "She will do anything you tell her. She sleeps overhead in the attic. And my room is underneath," she added; "so if you should want anything at any time, just tap on the radiator, and I'll come up at once. And supper will be ready as soon as you are."

In the hall Joan found Mrs. Fraser, ten minutes later, talking to the secretary.

"Miss Wentworth, this is Mr. Myers," she began.

"We've met already," said Myers, scrutinizing her closely. He seemed now to wear the same furtive air as Mrs. Fraser; it seemed part of the atmosphere of the institution. Joan had perceived it in the coachman, too.

"Miss Wentworth is to have charge of the nursing under Doctor Jenkins," said Mrs. Fraser.

"I hope I shan't conflict with—" began Joan doubtfully.

"Not at all, not at all," said Myers, speaking with false heartiness. "I hope we shall all get along well together."

Joan refused to face the problem of Myers' undoubted hostility. She went into the dining room, and found to her relief that the table was only laid for one.

"Mr. Myers has had supper?" she asked.

"You are to have your meals alone, Miss Wentworth," answered the matron.

"But I should not wish—"

"It is the doctor's orders," said Mrs. Fraser, in a tone of finality.

Coming in with the dessert, Mrs. Fraser found her nodding at the table. The girl had begun to feel an intense fatigue after the all-day journey. She began to realize, too, that her work at the hospital had been harder than she had known.

"I believe I shall go straight to bed," she said.

"The best thing you can do, Miss Wentworth. Everybody feels sleepy when they first arrive here. It's the hill air. You must rest well, Miss Wentworth, and please remember it's you who give the orders."

She preceded her up the stairs, carrying an oil lamp. She set it down in Joan's room, and then she seemed to hesitate.

"Miss Wentworth," she said, "the doctor wants us to do everything we can to make you comfortable. There isn't likely to be any work unless some patient comes in. You were not to attend Mrs. Dana, I think?"

She Would Remain. She Decided That While She Was Dressing.

"I was told not."

"That's so, Miss Wentworth." The matron's air was a very decided one, and again conveyed the impression of something hidden, which was, further, meant to remain hidden. "The doctor wired me that. I don't suppose he said anything about Mrs. Dana to you? Or—or Mr. Myers?"

Her stealthy watchfulness now seemed of ominous portent, and the matron made no attempt to suppress the eagerness with which she awaited Joan's answer.

"No, Doctor Lancaster said nothing," answered the girl.

Then, seeing that the matron was still regarding her doubtfully, she added:

"But is not Doctor Jenkins resident here? I have not seen him yet, you know."

The matron stared at her in astonishment. "Why, Miss Wentworth, that was Doctor Jenkins who drove you up from the station! Didn't you know?" she asked.

"That was Doctor Jenkins?"

"I thought Doctor Lancaster would have told you about him. He's a graduate of Johns Hopkins. Old Doctor Lancaster wanted to build up an institution here where we hill people could work among our own. But the plan fell through. You see, the hospital in Avonmouth got hold of most of the money, and then—there were other difficulties. I don't know about them—I've only been here three years, and Doctor Jenkins wasn't graduated then, and we never pay attention to the gossip of the villagers."

She checked herself hastily, as if she was afraid of compromising herself.

"Doctor Jenkins has given up his life to the work here," she continued. "He lives at Millville, but we hope some time that Doctor Lancaster will build up the place again, if only—if only he—"

There was almost a look of agony on her face, and again she turned her eyes upon Joan's face as if to search out her thoughts. Then, with an abrupt "good night," she turned away.

Joan called to her as she was leaving the room. "Mrs. Fraser," she said, "I understood there was a patient here besides Mrs. Dana."

The matron turned slowly round. "There was the boy who left this morning," she said inquiringly.

"But I understood from Doctor Lancaster—at least, he didn't tell me in so many words, but he gave me to understand that there was a special case here, requiring care and sympathy."

The matron stared at her. "No, there's nobody," she said. "Nobody except—"

Suddenly she uttered a convulsive sound, and, putting her hands over her face, ran from the room. Joan heard her stumbling down the corridor outside as if she had gone blind.

She stood irresolute in her room. Her sleepiness was gone; she was afraid, and she seemed to have got out of her depth. It had begun with John Lancaster's strange behavior in his office the evening before. She had not been able then to reconcile him in any way with the Lancaster whom she had seen, smug, self-satisfied and vain, in the operating room, the bully who kept the nurses in agitation and fear, though he was the traditional John Lancaster of whom she had heard. Then there was the man Myers, equally strange; and the matron. Some mystery was at the heart of it all; and Joan was the more afraid because the reason for her fear was unknown to her.

Her sleepiness was gone. She stood beside the window, looking out into the darkness. A whippoorwill was calling monotonously among the pines; here and there among the hills a solitary light was twinkling. The air was cool and balsam scented. It was like the dearly remembered days at home. But in the heart of that peace was apprehension.

Looking back now, Joan thought that she had undertaken a rash and extraordinary adventure in coming so far from Avonmouth alone, and at the proposal of a man whose reputation was an evil one. She would go home on the morrow.

Something was wrong, and in spite of his apparent kindness an inner prompting warned her to beware of Lancaster. He was at the heart of all this, and had enmeshed her in some scheme for his own purposes. She locked her door and went to bed, to sleep restlessly.

Chapter V

When she awakened it was morning. The sun was streaming brightly into the room. Through the window Joan saw a scene of exquisite beauty in the rolling hills, the winding road, the forest glades. Underneath the chickens were scrambling for the corn which the matron was flinging to them. A thousand birds were awing, the universal robin and the bluebird of her beloved home. The dew lay heavy on the leaves and grass. Joan felt a sudden ecstasy. This was her own country, and she had come back to it. Her fears were dissipated with the night shadows.

She would remain. She decided that while she was dressing. And yet a doubt was in her heart. And with it came the remembrance of something that had disturbed her during the night. Filtering into her consciousness came the recollection of an automobile rolling up to the door, and of men's voices conversing in low tones under her window. Then the machine had rolled away. It must have been about two in the morning.

Perhaps a patient had been brought to the institute, thought the girl, as she went downstairs. Mrs. Fraser's door was closed, and the only person astir seemed to be the colored maid, who nodded and smiled as she looked up from her sweeping. Joan began to pace the long verandah in front of the building, looking out across the hills and thinking over her situation.

Perhaps it was only morbidness, or mental fatigue, that had made her read things in the faces of Myers and Mrs. Fraser which did not exist there. Perhaps the day would disclose her position more definitely.

She was walking past the open door of the building when she saw a man leaving the doctor's room. It was Myers, the secretary. He saw Joan and came briskly out upon the verandah.

"Good morning, Miss Wentworth," he said, in his rasping tones. "Pleasant weather, isn't it? Much better here than in the heat of Avonmouth!"

"How do you do, Mr. Myers," said Joan, trying to overcome her instinctive disgust of the man. "You have a new patient here, haven't you?"

He looked at her with a sort of quizzical shrewdness. "What makes you think that, Miss Wentworth?" he inquired.

> Evidently the institution is a place of mystery. And what brings Doctor Lancaster?

No Danger From Comets

The Naval observatory says that the mass of a comet is never large; and the material is, for the most part, exceedingly tenuous. It is probable that the earth, if struck by a comet, would witness nothing more than a meteoric shower. The explosions, if any, would be similar to those hitherto observed in the case of large meteorites.

Walker—The county commissioners of Cass County at their meeting here refused the request of the Red Cross chapter to appropriate sufficient money to maintain the county nurse for another year.

Austin—A reduction of 5 mills in the tax rate here was announced. Reduction in the state rates and in the school rates have caused the decrease. The city's general revenue level is higher.

St. Paul—There are now 500,000 motor vehicles in Minnesota, with the result that every dollar of tax paid by car owners provides $500,000 for highway improvements. A highway bulletin showed car owners are paying an average of $16.50 a year; under the old plan the average rate paid in personal property taxes and license fees was $19.

WEAK, RUN DOWN AFTER SICKNESS

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Made Mrs. Dube Well and Strong

E. Hartford, Conn.—"After a severe sickness I was so weak that I could not do my housework, so my mother told me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. The first bottle helped me so much that I took six more bottles and felt fine. I have just given birth to a nice baby girl and am feeling strong and well. So different from the way I felt before. I am taking the Vegetable Compound right along while nursing. The baby seems to be in good health, and my friends say they see a big change for the better in me."—Mrs. EUGENE DUBE, 59 Woodbridge Street, East Hartford, Connecticut.

The Vegetable Compound is a splendid medicine to bring back health and strength. Many mothers have found this true, as did Mrs. Dube. Ask some of your neighbors and friends, for there are women everywhere who know by experience the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Permanent roads are a good investment —not an expense

Road Building Far Behind the Automobile

Millions now recognize the automobile as a necessity. It is no longer a luxury for the few. Sixty per cent of its use is for business.

Because of this the modern paved highway has become an economic necessity.

Yet although the mileage of Concrete Roads and Streets has been steadily increasing, our highway system today lags far behind the automobile. The great majority of our highways are as out of date as the single-track, narrow gauge railway of fifty years ago.

Such a condition not only seriously handicaps the progress of the automobile as a comfortable, profitable means of transportation, but also holds back commercial, industrial and agricultural advancement in practically every section of the country. It is costing taxpayers millions of dollars annually.

Highway building should be continued and enlarged upon.

Your highway authorities are ready to carry on their share of this great public work. But they must have your support. Tell them you are ready to invest in more and wider Concrete Highways now.

Big Happenings of the Week Condensed for the Benefit of Busy Readers.

Washington

Washington—The navy department, on behalf of the United States government, formally accepted the German built Zeppelin ZR-3.

Washington — More than 14,000 names were dropped from the government pension roll in the last year, reducing the total to 525,539. Pensions for 1924 totaled $229,944,777, or $33,017,723 less than for the previous year.

Washington—Secretary Mellon commissioned A. W. Gregg, a special assistant to the secretary of the treasury, to make a study of the British system of taxation, in the hope that he might obtain ideas which will give the treasury new possibilities in laying out a program of taxation in the future.

Washington—A severe attack of hiccoughs, incapacitating the official court reporter, forced a postponement of the courtmartial of Captain Harold A. Barnes in connection with an alleged deficit of $1,800 in his accounts as commissary officer at Fort Myer, Va. This was the fourth postponement since the trial began two weeks ago.

Washington—The assistant secretaryship of the navy is to remain in the Roosevelt family. Theodore Douglas Robinson, a nephew of the former president, has been decided upon for the post. He will succeed Col. Theodore Roosevelt, his cousin, who resigned two months ago in order to run for the governorship of New York, for which office he was defeated by Gov. Al Smith.

Domestic

Denver—Dr. Hiram W. Evans, imperial wizard of the Ku Klux Klan attended a meeting of the Denver klan at which it is said 5,000 new members were initiated.

New York—Jackie Coogan wants to be a mechanic when he grows up. Returning from Europe with his parents and governess, the little actor was loaded down with mechanical toys, the gifts of admirers. "I guess I'll be a mechanic," he announced. "I like mechanical things and probably that's what I'll do the best at."

Chattanooga—Al Jones and Bill Burch pleaded guilty in the criminal court to violating the old Ku Klux law of 1868, and were given 15 years each. This law fixed a penalty of from 10 years to death for going masked and armed for the purpose of committing murder, robbery and commission of other crimes.

Chicago—Officers of the Women's Preachers Association, at an executive meeting, decided that they would confine the work of their conventions to planning work for the future and to developing means whereby the woman preacher's opportunities might be enhanced, rather than to turn their meetings over to prominent speakers.

Vernal, Utah—Attired in the blue uniform of the Union army, with which he served during the Civil war, Dr. H. C. Hullinger—who on December 2 will be 100 years old—was the central figure at the unveiling here of a memorial monument erected in memory of Uinta country men who died during the World war. Dr. Hullinger is reputed to be the oldest practising physician in America.

New York—Health department authorities began investigation of the hiccoughing epidemic spreading throughout the city. In Queensborough alone 36 severe cases were found, 11 of them in hospitals. In Manhattan 14 cases were reported. Some of the physicians say the hiccoughing is a symptom of influenza and others assert that it is a precursor of sleeping sickness.

Bakersfield, Calif. — "Rainmaker" Hatfield closed a contract with the Kern County Cattlemen's Association and the Sheepmen's Association, whereby he promises to produce one and one-half inches of rain in Kern county between November 20 and December 20. If rain is produced, Hatfield is to receive $4,000, the money being guaranteed by the cattlemen and sheepmen.

San Francisco—After he had been decorated with $718.08 worth of air mail stamps in anticipation of an air mail trip to New York, Chester N. Weaver, San Francisco automobile dealer, was "barred from the mails" by a ruling from Paul Henderson, second assistant postmaster general. Mr. Weaver was rejected as a piece of mail when a telegram was received by James E. Power, San Francisco postmaster, from the second assistant postmaster general, saying: "Nobody is to ride in air mail except department officials."

Cambridge, Mass.—The average temperature on the surface of Mars except near the poles is not unlike that of a bright cool day on the surface of the earth, the National Academy of Sciences heard.

Chicago—Belief that incendiaries touched off a fire which destroyed a lumberyard and an apartment building, at an estimated loss of $200,000 was expressed by police who found Ludwig F. Larson, the watchman, bound and gagged, near the yards. Larson said he was surprised by three men in the lumberyard office, robbed and bound.

Oyster Bay, N. Y.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, defeated republican nominee for governor, and Mrs. Roosevelt will leave within a few days on a hunting trip in the South Carolina mountains.

Harrisburg, Pa.—Senator William E. Borah (rep., Idaho), in addressing the state council of republican women, declared the reconstruction of Europe cannot be effected until the United States has recognized Russia.

Dallas—The majority of Mrs. Miriam Ferguson (dem.) over Dr. George C. Butte (rep.) for governor, was 107,436 votes on the basis of complete returns from 221 counties in Texas tabulated by the Texas election bureau.

Chicago—Radio was used successfully to mobilize 148 men of the 131st Infantry in less than half an hour and the entire regiment answered roll call two hours after an assembly call had been radiocast. Only a few officers knew the test was to be made.

New York—Part of the Broadway theatrical district was turned into an imitation Venice, but without the gondolas, when a water main on Sixth avenue burst and flooded the adjacent streets. Impassable corners, the wetting of many a daintily shod foot, the calling out of the police reserves, increased business for taxicab drivers and a run on drug stores for mineral waters were among the divergent results of the mishap.

Berkeley, Calif.—Preliminary calculations just completed under the direction of Professor A. O. Leuschner of the astronomical department of the University of California and his assistants, reveal that the fast moving object discovered October 23, by Professor Baade at Bergedorf, Germany, is a minor planet moving in a highly eccentric eclipse at a high inclination to the ecliptic, close to the earth and near its perihelion, Professor Leuschner said.

Chicago—Nathan F. Leopold, Jr., and Richard Loeb, serving life sentences in the Joliet penitentiary for the kidnaping-murder of Robert Franks, will be members of the faculty of the prison, Warden Whitman has announced. Leopold has begun teaching night classes in English, devoting two hours a night in instruction in reading, writing and spelling. Loeb will take charge of an arithmetic class. The duties will be in addition to their jobs in the prison shops.

Sports

Minneapolis—The unexpected rise of the Northern Lights of Minnesota over Illinois was the great event of Midwestern football. The 20 to 7 victory of Minnesota was called a reversal, but it really was a reversion. Minnesota reverted to its early season form, when it was considered as one of the several strongest teams, and accomplished this reversion on a day when Illinois was just a little drawn from its battle with Chicago. Minnesota's power was not a surprise to its inside followers.

Foreign

London—The condition of the Turkish premier and foreign minister, Ismet Pasha, who is ill, has become worse, says a dispatch from Angora. His physicians have advised him to take a rest abroad, in which case he would relinquish office.

Belgrade—The Jugoslav parliament was to be dissolved by royal decree. New elections will be conducted February 18. Two opposition parties, especially the Croatian, have made public a proclamation accusing Pachitch of trying to win the elections by means of military pressure and by destruction of the unity of the Serbians, Croats and Slovenians with corruption.

Paris—To bring down the price of the family steak and chop, the Federation of French Provisions Traders has submitted to Premier Herriot a scheme for the importation on the hoof of 70,000 sheep and 20,000 cattle. Ten thousand of the cattle and 30,000 of the sheep would be brought from the Argentine, and 5,000 cattle and 20,000 sheep each from Uruguay and Abyssinia.

London—That Prime Minister Baldwin is confident of spending several years in office and living at 10 Downing street was indicated by the fact that his town house in Eaton Square was offered for sale. Once before, just before the general election when he went down in defeat on the protection issue, Mr. Baldwin advertised this residence for sale but shortly before voting day it was withdrawn from the market.

London—The steps taken by its leaders toward overhauling the liberal party, which suffered badly in the last election, are not viewed with entire favor by those in the party ranks. About 100 liberal candidates who were defeated in the recent polling met and criticized the committee of experts which Mr. Asquith, the party leader, announced last was working to meet the need for an overhauling of the party "from top to bottom."

Lisbon—A violent earthquake shock destroyed the town of Salvaterra de Magoa, 75 miles from Lisbon. The shock was plainly felt in the capital, causing many of the inhabitants to flee from their houses in terror.

Moscow—Plans are under way for a direct aerial passenger service between Moscow and Paris. The first airplane over the projected route, which covers Strasburg, Prague, Warsaw, Vilna and Smolensk, has arrived at Minsk, carrying the directors of the French Society of Aerial Communication which will direct the service.

BANKS TO GET BACK BIG SUM

War Finance Corporation Takes Steps To Help North Dakota Institutions

Bismarck, N. D.—The War Finance corporation has agreed to return to North Dakota closed banks all collateral "over-plus" in the same manner as large financial institutions of the Twin Cities, and, as a result, all closed bank depositors will materially gain, it was announced Monday, by L. R. Baird, general receiver of closed banks.

Under agreement, in cases where the War Finance corporation loaned money to the North Dakota banks and they were unable to repay, and the corporation foreclosed on the collateral security placed with it, the War Finance corporation will return to the closed banks all the money in excess of the actual amount needed to pay the loan and collections, according to Mr. Baird.

The same agreement, reached with large financial institutions of the Twin Cities three months ago, is already resulting in the return of the money for the benefit of the depositors of closed banks, Mr. Baird said.

The Minneapolis office had agreed to the proposal in principle but said it was necessary to get the authority from the War Finance corporation at Washington. The War Finance corporation, according to Mr. Baird, is the largest single creditor of closed North Dakota banks.

Many banks during the emergency of the last three years, borrowed money from the War Finance corporation, giving individual notes of various kinds for security, some times in ratio or two to one.

State officials greeted the announcement of the War Finance corporation with enthusiasm, believing that closed banks will gain materially. In instances where the closed banks have sufficient funds to permit redemption of collateral after it is overdue, the practice is followed, Mr. Baird said.

400 ARRESTED IN CLEANUP

Chicago Gangsters Most Sought Have Escaped Net.

Chicago.—Police Sunday arrested a total of 400 men, the result of Mayor Dever's order to rid the city of gangsters, gunmen, and criminals.

The prisoners were held while about 200 persons, men and women, looked them over in an endeavor to identify robbers and other criminals. But the drive which netted the police the group, failed of harboring the more influential members of Chicago's gang, the police said.

The mayor has ordered the police to redouble their efforts in "cleaning up the city." Known haunts of the underworld, formerly frequented by those men most sought, now virtually are deserted, the police finding the drive difficult as a result of unrest among gangsters which brought about the "cleanup" orders, followed the slaying here of Dion O'Banion, gang leader and florist. Lieutenants of the slain man have threatened reprisals, the police said.

In connection with the drive, county officers were compelled to maintain an all-night vigil over the grave of the slain gangster. Reports reaching the superintendent of the cemetery where O'Banion is buried, were that attempts would be made to steal his $10,000 silver and bronze casket.

JURY INDICTS FARGO BANKER

Arrested on Charges of Embezzlement and Misuse of Funds.

Fargo, N. D.—H. P. Beckwith of Fargo, former president of the defunct Northern National bank of Fargo, was arrested Monday under indictments returned by the federal grand jury that adjourned late Saturday.

Beckwith, arraigned Monday afternoon before Judge Andrew Miller of the United States district court, was required to furnish $15,000 bail, and was given until December 29 in which to make his formal plea to charges contained in an indictment returned against him.

Embezzlement, misapplication of bank funds, false entries, and the making of false statements of the bank's condition, are covered in the group of bills returned against Beckwith, whose alleged illegal operations, it is charged, total approximately $50,000.

It was the disclosure of the irregularities within the bank several months ago that caused the dissolution of the institution and the sale of its assets to the Security National bank of Fargo which bank also assumed liability to depositors of the Northern National with the result that there were no losses other than those of stockholders in the Northern National.

Fargo, N. D.—North Dakota will have a hand in practically every event of the 25th anniversary of the International Livestock exhibition at Chicago, November 29 to December 6 according to officials arranging for the event. Four stock judging teams one of the most elaborate showings of corn and grain ever sent to the show from the state Agricultural college and individual exhibits of stock and a large and enthusiastic delegation of visitors will be among the state's representations at Chicago.

His Opinion of Lenin

A good story comes from Russia. It is narrated that a band of pilgrims, headed by an old peasant from Rayazan, recently visited Lenin's mausoleum in the Red Square, Moscow. Above the tomb, on a marble slab, are inscribed the words:

"Lenin is dead, but his works live."

On reading this inscription the old peasant, in the fullness of his heart, blurted out: "Ekh, Ilitch, Ilitch! It would be better if thou were alive and thy works were dead!" The unconscious humorist was promptly arrested for his blasphemous utterance.—London Morning Post.

Missed Their Calling

Two well-known actors were playing golf and every stroke proclaimed that they were novices at the game. Several fair sized pieces of turf had been sent skyward and when one unusually large piece departed from its native soil one of the accompanying caddies turned to the other and whispered:

"Did yer tell me they were actors, Bill?"

"Yes," answered the other.

"Well," was the reply, "all I can say is they ought to be scene shifters."—Dramatic News.

Get rid of constipation by internal cleanliness

HEADACHES, biliousness, sleepless nights, heaviness, are Nature's warning that intestinal poisons are flooding your system. If this is allowed to continue, you may become a victim of serious organic disease.

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Why Physicians Favour Lubrication

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

Education Pays in Leadership, Influence and Honors

An investigation published by the United States Bureau of Education shows that of all the people in the United States who have performed distinguished service and received high honors that there was:

One person out of each 150,000 who had no schooling.

One person out of each 37,500 with a common school education.

One person out of each 1,724 with a high school education.

One person out of each 187 with a college education.

The above lines show the comparative chances of no schooling and with the different grades of education. Parents who give their children a common school education give them four times the chance to become a leader and receive distinction that the child with no schooling has. Those who give their children a high school education give them 87 times the chance, and the parents who sacrifice and give their children a college education give them more than 800 times the chance of the child without schooling.—E. ROUND ALUMINUM ROASTER Now Offered FREE

With Your Subscription To The

HOLT NEWS

Here is the best offer I have ever made to the subscribers of the News. This Aluminum Roaster is as fine a utensil as has ever been produced for the kitchen. It is made of 99% pure Alminum. I know that every housewife will be instantly impressed with this attractive offering, and I want to urge each and every one of my readers to send in their renewal subscription for a year at this time and procure the Aluminum Roaster as a free gift from the News. The supply is very limited so do not put off sending in your order. Do it today.

This round Aluminum Roaster was designed by a culinary artist for use by particular housewives. It is the most convenient roaster for chickens and small roasts. Easily cleaned; no sharp crevices to hold grease; Sunray finish inside, and cleans beautifully by merely wiping out with soap and water. Best workmanship. Extra heavy rims. Both sections fit perfectly. Note particularly offset handles which makes opening roaster very easy.

Made of 99% pure Aluminum by one of the largest manufacturers of kitchen utensils. A long life of hard service is assured in this Roaster. You can see for yourself that it is a finely made article of seamless Aluminum of sufficient heavy gauge to withstand hard and continuous wear. It is just the ideal size and shape. You will find many uses for it.

The Story of Minnesota's Grand Old Farm Paper

FARM, STOCK & HOME needs no introduction. Its first issue dates back to the pioneer days of 1884, and wherever you go throughout the great Northwest you will find subscribers who have been with FARM, STOCK & HOME from the very beginning boosting and praising them for their unselfish service toward the advancement and betterment of farming and dairying for a period of 40 years.

Farm, Stock & Home
The Northwest's Foremost Farm Paper
MINNEAPOLIS

From its very beginning FARM, STOCK & HOME has championed only good causes; it has been the bitter enemy of all fraudulent schemes, and has started many movements in the interest of farmers. This paper put the Northwest in the corn belt with its prize acre yield contest of 1911-12; it founded the first farmers' co-operative creamery and thus established a system of double profits in dairying. And today their Editorial Staff is as active as ever before in making this the best and most interesting farm paper ever printed.

Farming is a business, and every business must have a sort of research bureau to study its problems. The banker has his statistical reports, the manufacturer his technical journal, and the farmer should look to the best farm paper for sound and logical advice. No farm paper in this area can claim so long and continuous a record of service as FARM, STOCK & HOME has. They are constantly searching the world over for knowledge and information that farmers and dairymen should have, and every issue of this paper is chock-full of interesting and instructive reading matter.

Some Mexican Laws.

Certain Mexican states have an interesting law affecting burglars. The culprit in cases of petty larceny is made to repay the plaintiff by working for him so many days, the period varying according to the nature of the theft.

Holt Wins the Prize

The Farmers Co-op Creamery of Holt, won, first prize for largest attendance at the Red River Dairyman's Convention held at Thief River Falls last week. I want to thank the patrons for their support in winning the silver cup and I assure you it gives a person some encouragement to boost for something when the patrons back you up like they are doing here in Holt.

Let us try and put into practice some of the things we heard at this convention. It seems to me that the very first thing we should do is to get a "Cow Testing Assn." started. There is no other accurate way to find what your cows are doing, whether they are paying for their feed and giving you a profit or whether they are eating up the profit some of the other cows are giving. I wish you would leave your names with me, if you are interested, and I shall see if we can not get enough to start the first cow testing association in this vicinity. We already have a few patrons that are more then willing to join but the required number should be at least 20; 26 preferable. Again thanking you for bringing the silver cup to Holt, I remain

Respectfully.

Alfalfa Day Dec 11

On December 11th, an Alfalfa Day will be held at Thief River Falls with meetings and programs in the afternoon and evening. This will no doubt be one of the most important meetings held in this territory this year. There will be a good opportunity of hearing some good talks on alfalfa and general farming problems. The speakers who are expected to participate in this meeting are as follows: Dan Wallace of The Farmer; C. T. Jeffray, Pres. of the Soo Line; A. B. Lyman, Alfalfa Man from Excelsior; E. G. Quamme, Federal Land Bank; O. H. Smith, State Immigration Commissioner; Daniel E. Willard, Great Northern Ry; Mr. Fungston, Soo Line Ry, T. E. Ofstun, Secy. Rural Credit Bureau. There is a strong possibility that the Governor elect. Theo Christianson will be one of the speakers at this Alfalfa meeting. The result of a meeting of this kind will single out this territory as the Alfalfa Field of the State of Minnesota. Every farmer is urged to be present. Alfalfa is the coming thing for our farmer in this particular section of the State of Minnesota. Why should the farmer be interested? BECAUSE it will mean dollars and cents in the farmers pocket a few years from now and the world will know you are living in a green garden spot. REMEMBER THE DAY (Dec. 11) A Day for the whole family.

IMPORTANT

All the farmers who expect to seed alfalfa this year are urged to see the officers of the Marshall County State Bank, giving your name and the number of pounds you will need.

This must be in our hands before December 9th. Seed will be ordered for you at cost not to exceed 50 cents per pound. Last year 1000 pounds was distributed in this territory and we want to make it 2000 pounds if possible this year. I want to see alfalfa hay and sweet clover pasture on every farm in this territory.

Valuable Hints to Patrons

Delivering Cream to our Creamery

Pasteurization is very important, yet to have it done in an inefficient way is worse than not at all. In view of the fact we ask the cooperation and urge upon all patrons to try and do their share to help us. First— You must try and bring a 1st grade cream and have same delivered in the forenoon if possible. Second— Help us to get our average test 30 per cent or better. Sweet cream can be pasteurized more efficiently than sour, and high testing cream will save you more money for the reason that with a low testing cream it is impossible to churn it without considerable butterfat being drained out with the buttermilk.

Although a formal announcement of the action has been withheld, it is understood that the president had accepted the resignation. Mr. Corey, who is from Nebraska, was appointed to the board as a representative of the Mid-Western farming area.

Domestic

Atlantic City—The total debt standing against farms in the United States is estimated at $14,000,000,000, State Master Jesse Newsom of Indiana, told the National Grange convention.

New York—Five men and two women, the entire crew of the three-masted schooner, Susan B., which sank off the Virginia Capes, were rescued by the city of Atlanta, a radio message said.

La Junta, Colo.—With the declaration that he had shot himself, but that "it didn't hurt at all," William Kimball, 5 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. William Kimball of Holly, Colo., informed his mother that he had fatally wounded himself. He died in a hospital here a short time later.

Kansas City—The champion carlot of Aberdeen-Angus cattle, exhibited by W. E. and Carl Moss, Princeton, Mo., brought the highest price for a carlot of cattle in the history of the American Royal Livestock Show—$20 a 100 pounds. Last year the championship load, Herefords, brought $17.50 a 100 pounds, the previous high price.

Jefferson City—Sam A. Baker, republican, was elected governor of Missouri by a plurality of 5,872 over Dr. Arthur W. Nelson, democrat, the official vote in the November 4 election tabulated by the secretary of state, shows. The official count gave Baker 640,135; Nelson 634,263.

Chicago—Fielding Smith, 19 years old, arrested on a charge of blackmail after Jacob Franks, father of Robert Franks, for whose murder Nathan Leopold, Jr., and Richard Loeb now are serving life terms in prison, had received a letter demanding $8,000, was paroled for a year by a judge in the boys' court.

Omaha—The Grain Marketing Company, organized in Chicago with a capital of $26,000,000, was criticized for building a business "from the top down and not from the bottom up," in violation of a basic law of the world of nature and world business, in a resolution adopted by the Nebraska Farmers Co-operative Grain and Livestock Association convention here.

Seattle—Facing a payment of $1,145,525 March 1 for bond interest and redemption, Seattle's Municipal Street Railway is to go on a warrant basis December 25, railway officials have announced. Since the city acquired the railway system in 1919 for $15,000,000 the lines have paid out of revenues $6,254,000 in interest, stated officials, in addition to keeping up expenses for repairs.

Indianapolis, Ind. — "Utmost support" of the American Legion child welfare program and the campaign soon to be conducted for a $5,000,000 endowment fund for World war orphans and disabled veterans was pledged by Legion adjutants from all parts of the country at the closing session of their annual conference here. Plans for the endowment campaign were laid before the adjutants by National Commander James A. Drain and other officials.

Hand to amend the bankruptcy petition against the concern to include Charles A. Stoneham, part owner of the New York Giants, as a general partner. Max Steuer, representing Mr. Stoneham, opposed the motion.

Philadelphia—The State Supreme Court—Judge Ben Lindsey, juvenile court jurist, will retain the bench he has held for 23 years, it was determined when mail votes were counted giving him a majority of 130 votes.

Detroit, Mich.—An endowment of $400,000, the largest ever bestowed upon the University of Michigan for purposes of medical research, was presented to the board of regents by Mrs. Christine MacDonald Simpson, widow of Thomas H. Simpson, Detroit manufacturer, clubman and industrial executive.

New York—Opening guns in the 1925 mayoralty campaign have been fired. Separate meetings have been conducted by the fusion forces and the republicans, each seeking to develop a plan of action against possible re-election of Mayor John F. Hylan. The fusionists, meeting at the call of Joseph M. Price, veteran of several fusion campaigns, formed the nucleus of an organization which is planned to be stronger than that of previous years.

Sports

Atlantic City, N. J.—Action designed to broaden the field of the organization's activity, approval of an unprecedented array of 137 record and noteworthy athletic performances during the past year, indorsement of proposals to benefit America's future Olympic campaigns and ratification of a list of 28 championship awards for 1925 were the outstanding developments in the opening sessions of the thirty-sixth annual convention of the Amateur Athletic union.

Oakland, Calif.—The Oakland club of the Pacific Coast baseball league passed into the ownership of Walter Johnson, pitching ace of the Washington Americans, and George Weiss, owner of the New Haven club of the Eastern league, following an announcement here by J. Cal Ewing, retiring Oakland owner. Although those in charge were somewhat secretive about the consideration, they admitted that it is in the neighborhood of $400,000. Johnson is to manage the club, according to the present plan, while Weiss will take charge of the business end.

Foreign

EGYPT SETTLES BRITISH CLAIM

Ziwar Pasha To Form New Cabinet As Zagloud Ministry Resigns

Cairo, Egypt.—The Egyptian cabinet headed by Zagloul Pasha, tendered its resignation Monday to King Fuad, who accepted it.

The king summoned Ziwar Pasha, president of the senate, who consented to form a cabinet.

The indemnity of £500,000 demanded by the British for the death of the sirdar was paid by the Egyptian government Monday.

The payment was accompanied by a note protesting against the British demands for evacuation of the Sudan by Egyptian troops and for the withdrawal of all opposition to the wishes of the British government concerning the protection of foreign interests in Egypt, which demands the note characterized as unjustifiable.

Agree to Some Demands.

Cairo.—The Egyptian government's reply to the British note in connection with the assassination of Major General Sir Lee Oliver Stack, governor general of the Sudan and sirdar of the Egyptian army, agrees to Great Britain's demand for an apology, punishment of the assassins and an indemnity of £500,000. It also promises to prevent any disturbance of the peace by demonstrations.

The reply says the British demand regarding the Sudan breaks the status quo and is contrary to the constitution under which King Fuad is commander-in-chief of the Egyptian army. It considers the demand regarding the Gezira irrigation project premature.

The communication further says the position of foreign officials is regulated by diplomatic agreement and cannot be modified without the consent of parliament.

MISSING PROMOTER FOUND

Koretz, "King of Swindlers," Arrested in Canadian City.

Chicago.—Leo Koretz, called "the king of swindlers" and "peer of all confidence men," will be returned here the latter part of this week, or soon thereafter, to explain the mysteries of his disappearance with millions of dollars of prominent Chicagoans and others, who had given him funds to invest in a mythical Bayano river syndicate in Panama, which he claimed to be a $1,000,000 corporation.

This announcement was made Monday through the office of State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe, who received word of the arrest of Koretz at Halifax, N. S., where he has lived since his disapparance. He was arrested on a charge of using the mails to defraud.

Koretz, with $2,000,000 in cash in a handbag, disappeared 11 months ago, leaving his wife and family, and other relatives and many friends with nothing more tangible than worthless receipts or certificates in his Bayano corporation, which was identified after he left here as the "Bayano bubble."

In Halifax Koretz had assumed the poise and popularity which made him a favorite here, and with which he cultivated many of his clients.

HARDING FUNERAL MONDAY

Remains Laid to Rest in Tomb by Side of Late Husband.

Marion, O.—This Ohio city, which has known the heights of joy and depths of sorrow since 1920, enacted Monday the last scene in the life of Mrs. Florence Kling Harding, widow of the late president.

Shortly after 2 p. m. Mrs. Harding's body was borne over the same route as that traversed by the funeral cortege of the 29th president of the United States to Marion cemetery and laid to rest.

Simple but dignified honors marked the services. The guard of 23 soldiers which has been on duty at the Harding tomb since the death of the president, acted as an escort to the body, and this was augmented by 100 men and officers ordered here from Fort Hayes at Columbus, by President Coolidge.

All business in Marion was suspended at 12:30 p. m., and the city was garbed in deep mourning.

French Loan Oversubscribed.

New York. — Substantial oversubscription of the $100,000,000 French loan, offered Monday, was announced when the books were closed 45 minutes after the opening. The $100,000,000 loan was offered in a single issue of 25 years, 7 per cent gold bonds at 94. The effect of the loan is to absorb the recent series of short term credits and convert the funding into a 25-year operation.

Stains May Solve Mystery.

Columbus, O.—A bit of tissue that may have been from the body of a human, found on the cellar steps, and dark stains which may be bloodspots were found in the parsonage of Christ Evangelical Lutheran church in Bexley Monday by County Prosecutor John R. King and assistants who are seeking to solve the mysterious death of Mrs. Addie Sheatsley, 50, whose body, practically cremated, was found in the furnace of the house a week ago by her husband, the Rev. C. W. Sheatsley.

Around the World

Winona, Minn.—"A few years ago I had a severe attack of ptomaine poisoning which left my blood in very bad condition. I tried a great many so-called tonics but felt no better until a friend suggested my trying a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery which gave me immediate relief. It is surely an excellent tonic, does not purge and is not objectionable to the taste. I have since been around the world, and always carried a bottle of the 'Discovery' right with me. I would not be without it."—Walter Dunston, R. F. D. 2, Willow Farm. All dealers.

FROM PERSONAL EXPERIENCE

Mrs. Bradford Recommends Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Phoebus, Virginia.—"Having this opportunity I just cannot refrain from saying a word of praise for the Lydia E. Pinkham medicines. I have used them as occasion required for twenty years, and my three sisters have also used them, and always with the most gratifying results. During the Change of Life I had the usual distressing symptoms—hot flashes, insomnia, etc., — and I am pleased to testify to the wonderful results I obtained from the Vegetable Compound. I heartily recommend it to any woman and I will be pleased to answer any inquiries that might be sent to me through the publication of my testimonial."—Mrs. H. L. BRADFORD, 109 Armstead Street, Phoebus, Virginia.

Consider carefully Mrs. Bradford's letter. Her experience ought to help you. She mentions the trials of middle age and the wonderful results she obtained from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you are suffering from nervous troubles, irritability, or if other annoying symptoms appear and you are blue at times, you should give the Vegetable Compound a fair trial. For sale by druggists everywhere.

Take Childish Minds Off Dental Terrors

One of the times "when a feller needs a friend" most sorely is when he is led by an apprehensive mother into the dentist's office.

The modern method is to supply this same "feller" with a friend, or better, several friends, who will play about with him in a special room or outdoor area while waiting for his turn to come for the dentist's chair.

"Send the children to the dentists in groups," says Dr. Samuel Adams Cohen in Hygeia, health magazine, "and the visit will seem to the child an excursion of pleasure."

Doctor Cohen tells how for several years it has been the custom of a Boston dental infirmary to assemble children in groups in one large waiting room which is used as a playground. The children play games until summoned to the dental chair and their minds are diverted from the main purpose of their presence there. Games, toys, exhibits and miniature museums are used for the purpose.

> "THEN HELP ME!"

> SYNOPSIS. — Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr. John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Joan Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance. She is upset, through no fault of her own, and makes a trivial blunder at a critical moment. The patient dies and Doctor Lancaster accuses her of clumsiness. She is suspended, the action meaning the end of her hope of a career as a nurse. Without relatives or friends, and desperate, Joan, urged by her landlady, goes to Doctor Lancaster's office to ask him to overlook her blunder and reinstate her. She overhears a violent altercation between Doctor Lancaster and other men she does not see. Joan is struck by the favorable change in the appearance and demeanor of the doctor, recalling that at times in the hospital he has been gentle and thoughtful and at others supercilious and bullying. He tells her he can do nothing for her at the hospital, but offers her a position in a nursing institution in the country, telling her she can be of "great assistance" to him. A man named Myers demands she tell him what the doctor had said to her. She denies him the information, and he covertly threatens her. At the institution, which is owned by Doctor Lancaster, Joan finds Myers. He tells her he is the secretary. She instinctively dislikes and fears him. The only patient at the institute is a Mrs. Dana, demented but harmless. Joan is vaguely uneasy, feeling that there is some mystery about the place.

"I thought I heard an auto drive up to the institute last night."

Myers looked at her in the same manner. "The doctor came back last night unexpectedly," he said.

"But I thought Doctor Jenkins lived at Millville?"

"Not Jenkins, Miss Wentworth. Doctor Lancaster."

"Why," stammered the girl, "I must have misunderstood, then. I hope Doctor Lancaster is not ill. He was looking unwell when I saw him the day before yesterday."

"That's just what you might have told me when I asked you about him," said Myers triumphantly. "Well, Miss Wentworth, if you are going to ask me questions I suppose I can ask you questions."

"If I can answer them."

"Precisely," said the other. "I want to know if you can answer them. Now let's be frank. What do you know about all this?"

"I beg your pardon?" Joan inquired, declining his invitation to seat herself beside him.

"About all this," repeated Myers. "Come, now, you know what I mean as well as I do. How did Doctor Lancaster come to engage you?"

"If you have really a right to know, Mr. Myers," said Joan, "you had better ask Doctor Lancaster himself."

"O, all right," said Myers huffily. "Only the time will come when you'll wish you'd been frank with me. If we put all our cards on the table we can have a frank look into the situation."

"Really, Mr. Myers, I had no idea that I had come to a gambling house," said Joan, more nettled by the familiarity of his tone than by the words. "I have no cards at all, as you term it. I am simply an employee of Doctor Lancaster, and if that is not satisfactory to you I must refer you to him."

Myers grew red. His short, stocky figure with the wide shoulders looked abominably mean as he planted himself upon the porch and surveyed Joan with a furtive, sneering expression. He was not in any sense a gentleman, just a low class of bully, as Joan could plainly see from his gestures, even if his next words had not made this plain.

"So that's your attitude, is it?" he said, jerking out the words between his teeth. "All right, Miss Wentworth, you and I will play our hands separately. Don't come to me afterward, though, and say I didn't warn you. And if you don't like my ways and speech, and think I'm too ordinary for your taste—here comes the doctor! Go and make a complaint about me!"

Joan, turning from the man in disgust, saw Lancaster standing at the door. She went toward him, and then she looked at him in consternation. For Lancaster was undeniably ill. His face was a dead white, and he was leaning on a stick, as if to support himself.

"Doctor Lancaster—" Joan began.

He straightened himself with an effort, held out his hand and took her own. "I am very glad you came, Miss Wentworth," he said. "I hope you like the institute?"

Myers, who had come up and planted himself between them, flung out his challenge.

"She likes the institute all right, doctor," he said, with a short laugh, "but I reckon she don't like me. Bad taste, I call it. What do you say, doctor?"

There was an indescribable insolence in the man's tone. Joan looked for one of Lancaster's explosions of flaming wrath. But to her amazement none came. He seemed struggling to control himself. He flushed and looked from one to the other.

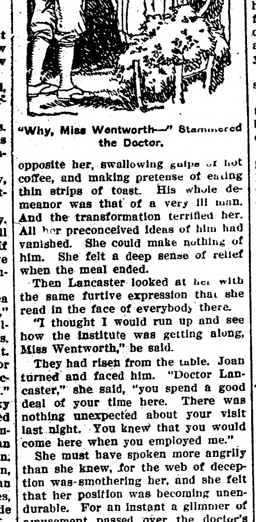
"Well, well, Myers," he said, hesitating, "I think things will turn out all right. Miss Wentworth and you won't conflict in any way. You mustn't quarrel, you know. I want all my employees to like each other," he ended weakly.

And he gave Joan the impression of pitiful impotence, as if he were somehow in the secretary's power and had surrendered his will to him—Lancaster, the tyrant of the Southern hospital, the smug bully of the operating theater! Joan saw a flash of triumph in Myers' eyes, and, with another laugh, the man left them and went into the building.

"I think breakfast is ready, Miss Wentworth," said Lancaster, after a moment, offering the girl his arm.

But Joan gave him hers instead, and they went together into the dining room.

She was glad to see that Myers was not to eat with them. Hungry as she was, she could not have taken breakfast in the man's presence; and even now she could hardly manage to eat, with Lancaster, so evidently ill, seated opposite her, swallowing gulps of hot coffee, and making pretense of eating thin strips of toast. His whole demeanor was that of a very ill man. And the transformation terrified her. All her preconceived ideas of him had vanished. She could make nothing of him. She felt a deep sense of relief when the meal ended.



"Why, Miss Wentworth—" Stammered the Doctor.

Then Lancaster looked at her with the same furtive expression that she read in the face of everybody there.

"I thought I would run up and see how the institute was getting along, Miss Wentworth," he said.

They had risen from the table. Joan turned and faced him. "Doctor Lancaster," she said, "you spend a good deal of your time here. There was nothing unexpected about your visit last night. You knew that you would come here when you employed me."

She must have spoken more angrily than she knew, for the web of deception was smothering her, and she felt that her position was becoming unendurable. For an instant a glimmer of amusement passed over the doctor's face.

"Why, Miss Wentworth, you are a regular spitfire," he said.

"It is true, then?"

"Well—yes, it is true. My work at Avonmouth is not too exacting for me to come here frequently."

"You knew you were coming, and you did not tell me. And you hinted at a patient requiring care. There is no patient, unless it is yourself. Doctor Lancaster, you engaged me for certain work here, and I am ready to fulfill it. It is not requisite that you should explain anything to me. But please give me the work you hired me to do, and do not try to deceive me."

Lancaster, who had been regarding her intently as she spoke, glanced hurriedly into the hall before replying. A look of fear had come into his eyes. Joan knew that it was Myers whom he feared. There was something dreadful in seeing this man cringe before the bully, this man who had, in turn, made others cringe before him.

"Miss Wentworth," said Lancaster in a low tone, "believe me, I have no intention of deceiving you. On the contrary, it is my wish to confide in you. Will you come out on the perch and permit me to smoke?"

She bowed, and they went out together. They took their seats upon two chairs at the end of the verandah, Joan purposely seating herself between her companion and the door. She knew why he kept glancing toward it.

"Miss Wentworth," Lancaster began, "we spoke of loyalty the other night. If you saw a human being in trouble of his own making, would it be your impulse to help him, or to leave him to fight his battle alone?"

"I should help him if I could," said Joan.

"Then help me," said Lancaster. "It was myself of whom I spoke to you. Will you help me with loyalty and sympathy, and refuse to be discouraged?"

The girl softened toward him; he was obviously sincere, and obviously distressed. "Gladly, Doctor Lancaster," she answered.

"I thought that I could trust you when I saw your face, and I was sure of it when you talked of your vocation. And I cannot trust anyone else. I have no opportunity—" he broke off irresolutely and then went on, "I have had no opportunity of taking up that matter with the board yet," he continued.

Joan knew that he was not speaking frankly now; but his next words were in the same tone of sincerity.

"Miss Wentworth, that matter and this is all bound up together. You must help me before I can help you, as I said to you when you came into the consulting room. I cannot explain any more now. I want help in the biggest fight of my life, and, if I fail, I want a witness that I have fought. I saw you and thought you would give me your help. For God's sake don't refuse me!"

In spite of his sincerity the idea flashed through Joan's mind that his troubles might be the fancies of a sick man.

"If I discharge you before the month is over, don't go. Refuse to go. Nobody can make you go. I am at the head of the institute. Ignore me. Stay!"

"I'll stay," said Joan, and then, looking at his white face and trembling hands, she thought she knew what was the matter with him.

"Listen, Doctor Lancaster," she began, laying her fingers on his arm. But then she saw that he was not looking at her. He was looking past her toward Myers, who was coming across the pasture toward the entrance. His expression was transformed.

"Miss Wentworth," he said, with a sudden change of tone, "what was I saying to you? I am not myself at all today. I have been greatly overworked, and talking nonsense. Don't remember it. I meant nothing at all. Of course you must remain your month, in case any patients come, and then we'll see what we can do about the position."

And, as Myers came up to them, the same hopeless, cringing expression came into his eyes.

The secretary ignored Joan completely. "Well, doctor," he said, "I have the quarterly statement ready for you. Won't you come and look over it? I must have your signature, and you know how hard it is to fasten you down."

"Yes, I'll come, certainly, Myers," said Lancaster, rising.

The two men went into the house together. Joan heard the door close behind them. She was left to ponder over that interview.

She was conscious of two conflicting impulses: to leave, and to remain for Lancaster's sake. There was something about the man's pliable condition that aroused all her sympathies. But there was something about the whole place repulsive in the extreme.

She must get allies in this blind fight against the secretary if she remained. Whom? Mrs. Fraser? That was impossible as yet.

At that moment she saw Doctor Jenkins driving up the path, and went to meet him.

The boy sprang to the ground and raised his hat. "Good morning, Miss Wentworth. How is the doctor today?" he asked.

"Doctor Lancaster looks very ill," she answered. "And Doctor Jenkins, I want to ask you—"

"Pardon me, Miss Wentworth. Can I see him?"

"He is with Mr Myers."

Jenkins' face assumed an aspect of profound discouragement. "Then I'll come back this afternoon," he said, preparing to enter the buggy again.

But he found Joan intercepting his passage. She had noted the look on his face, and she felt that he understood much which could be explained.

"Doctor Jenkins," she said quietly, "Doctor Lancaster is unwell and I am his nurse. Will you not tell me what is the matter with him?"

"Why, Miss Wentworth—" stammered the doctor.

> So Doctor Lancaster himself is the sick man! And Joan says she'll help him. What ails the doctor?

Propaganda

The noun propaganda and the verb propagate are derived from the same Latin root and are related in meaning. They are derived from the Latin verb propago—pro, forward, and pango, fasten. One meaning of propaganda, and the common one, is the art, practice, or system of propagating or spreading or extending the tenets or principles of a certain religious, economic or political doctrine. The one who propagates such doctrine, particularly with zeal, is called a propagandist.

African Dean Is Gloomy

Johannesburg, South Africa, has what the residents call a "gloomy dean" in the person of Rev. M. Ponsonby. He thinks that no honest man can look on South Africa with hopefulness unless there is a radical change. The white man has interfered with the black race, he says, driving them from agricultural and fighting to industrial occupations, and by spreading half castes over the entire country through marrying the black women.

Revenge Is Sweet

McIntosh made a fine art of meanness. When traveling he would keep redcaps busily attending to his baggage and then purposely forget the tip until the starting of the train made it almost impossible.

One morning, however, he executed this maneuver once too often on the same man.

"Dear, dear! I am so sorry," he said, as the train gave a lurch forward. "I quite forgot to get change."

"And I am very sorry, too, sir," was the man's dry retort. "I quite forgot about that grip of yours—it's lying on the platform."

Boschee's Syrup

Allays irritation, soothes and heals throat and lung inflammation. The constant irritation of a cough keeps the delicate mucous membrane of the throat and lungs in a congested condition, which BOSCHEE'S SYRUP gently and quickly heals. For this reason it has been a favorite household remedy for colds, coughs, bronchitis and especially for lung troubles in millions of homes all over the world for the last fifty-eight years, enabling the patient to obtain a good night's rest, free from coughing with easy expectoration in the morning. You can buy BOSCHEE'S SYRUP wherever medicines are sold.—Adv.

Swift Financiering

A negro cook of middle age, who had saved considerable money, suddenly became engaged to a sporting man of her own race.

One morning her mistress saw her gazing abstractedly out of the kitchen window and inquired: "What's the matter, Hannah?"

"Well, mum," she replied, "with my husband-that-is-to-be everything goes with such lightnin' speed that I'm confused. Day before yesterday we got acquainted, yesterday we got engaged, and today I find he already owes me $85."

Most headaches due to lack of internal cleanliness

WHEN you are constipated poisons form in the accumulated food waste and are carried to all parts of the body. Headaches follow. Biliousness, insomnia, lack of energy, all result from constipation, which if unchecked will lead to serious results.

Avoid Laxatives—Say Doctors

A noted authority says that laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition.

Medical science has found in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative, and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

ROUND ALUMINUM ROASTER Now Offered FREE

With Your Subscription To The

HOLT NEWS

Here is the best offer I have ever made to the subscribers of the News. This Aluminum Roaster is as fine a utensil as has ever been produced for the kitchen. It is made of 99% pure Alminum. I know that every housewife will be instantly impressed with this attractive offering, and I want to urge each and every one of my readers to send in their renewal subscription for a year at this time and procure the Aluminum Roaster as a free gift from the News. The supply is very limited so do not put off sending in your order. Do it today.

This round Aluminum Roaster was designed by a culinary artist for use by particular housewives. It is the most convenient roaster for chickens and small roasts. Easily cleaned; no sharp crevices to hold grease; Sunray finish inside, and cleans beautifully by merely wiping out with soap and water. Best workmanship. Extra heavy rims. Both sections fit perfectly. Note particularly offset handles which makes opening roaster very easy.

10 in. diameter; 5½ in. deep.

Made of 99% pure Aluminum by one of the largest manufacturers of kitchen utensils. A long life of hard service is assured in this Roaster. You can see for yourself that it is a finely made article of seamless Aluminum of sufficient heavy gauge to withstand hard and continuous wear. It is just the ideal size and shape. You will find many uses for it.

The Story of Minnesota's Grand Old Farm Paper

FARM, STOCK & HOME needs no introduction. Its first issue dates back to the pioneer days of 1884, and wherever you go throughout the great Northwest you will find subscribers who have been with FARM, STOCK & HOME from the very beginning boosting and praising them for their unselfish service toward the advancement and betterment of farming and dairying for a period of 40 years.

From its very beginning FARM, STOCK & HOME has championed only good causes; it has been the bitter enemy of all fraudulent schemes, and has started many movements in the interest of farmers. This paper put the Northwest in the corn belt with its prize acre yield contest of 1911-12; it founded the first farmers' co-operative creamery and thus established a system of double profits in dairying. And today their Editorial Staff is as active as ever before in making this the best and most interesting farm paper ever printed.

Farming is a business, and every business must have a sort of research bureau to study its problems. The banker has his statistical reports, the manufacturer his technical journal, and the farmer should look to the best farm paper for sound and logical advice. No farm paper in this area can claim so long and continuous a record of service as FARM, STOCK & HOME has. They are constantly searching the world over for knowledge and information that farmers and dairymen should have, and every issue of this paper is chock-full of interesting and instructive reading matter.

Valuable Hints to Patrons

Delivering Cream to our Creamery

Pasteurization is very important, yet to have it done in an inefficient way is worse than not at all. In view of the fact we ask the cooperation and urge upon all patrons to try and do their share to help us. First— You must try and bring a 1st grade cream and have same delivered in the forenoon if possible. Second— Help us to get our average test 30 per cent or better. Sweet cream can be pasteurized more efficiently than sour, and high testing cream will save you more money for the reason that with a low testing cream it is impossible to churn it without considerable butterfat being drained out with the buttermilk.

Death of Mrs. Gunder Sorter

Mrs. Gunder Sorter was taken violently sick Sunday night and in spite of all that medical skill and loving care could do for her, she passed away Monday afternoon.

Death was caused by a complication of stomach and bowel trouble from which she had suffered for many years. The funeral services were held Thursday afternoon, Rev. Ordahl officating. Obituary next week.

Alfalfa Day Dec. 11.

On December 11th, an Alfalfa Day will be held at Thief River Falls with meetings and programs in the afternoon and evening. This will no doubt be one of the most important meetings held in this territory this year. There will be a good opportunity of hearing some good talks on alfalfa and general farming problems. The speakers who are expected to participate in this meeting are as follows: Dan Wallace of The Farmer; C. T. Jeffray, Pres. of the Soo Line; A. B. Lyman, Alfalfa Man from Excelsior; E. G. Quamme, Federal Land Bank; O. H. Smith, State Immigration Commissioner; Daniel E. Willard, Great Northern Ry; Mr. Fungston, Soo Line Ry, T. E. Ofstun, Secy. Rural Credit Bureau. There is a strong possibility that the Governor elect, Theo Christianson will be one of the speakers at this Alfalfa meeting. The result of a meeting of this kind will single out this territory as the Alfalfa Field of the State of Minnesota. Every farmer is urged to be present. Alfalfa is the coming thing for our farmers in this particular section of the State of Minnesota. Why should the farmer be interested? BECAUSE it will mean dollars and cents in the farmers pocket a few years from now and the world will know you are living in a green garden spot. REMEMBER THE DAY (Dec. 11) A Day for the whole family.

IMPORTANT

All the farmers who expect to seed alfalfa this year are urged to see the officers of the Marshall County State Bank, giving your name and the number of pounds you will need.

This must be in our hands before December 9th. Seed will be ordered for you at cost not to exceed 50 cents per pound. Last year 1000 pounds was distributed in this territory and we want to make it 2000 pounds if possible this year. I want to see alfalfa hay and sweet clover pasture on every farm in this territory.

Big Happenings of the Week Condensed for the Benefit of Busy Readers.

Washington

Washington—A lock of Napoleon Bonaparte's hair originally presented by France's immortal emperor to his blood relative, Prince Charles Lucian Bonaparte, has been given to the Massachusetts Historical Society by Mrs. Archibald Hopkins of this city. The memento has been an heirloom in the donors family for three generations, having been given to Edward Everett when minister to England, by Prince Charles in 1845.

Washington—A bird bath, constructed of stone from France, is to be left in the Piney Branch Valley here by Ambassador and Mme. Jusserand, as a permanent expression of gratitude to the songsters that gave them relief during the war from their burdens of anxiety and anguish. They have engaged M. Cret, a French architect of Lyons, France, and Philadelphia, to design the stone bath, which will be inscribed: "To the Birds of Piney Branch—From their Friends, Elsie and Jules Jusserand."

Domestic

Chico, Calif.—Leroy Scott, 17 years old, attempted to strike a crippled goose with the butt end of his gun while hunting here. The blow discharged both barrels of the gun and Scott was fatally wounded. He died here.

Boston, Mass.—Rain which fell through New England brought relief from drouth contions which had become acute in many sections as a result of a period of 45 consecutive rainless days, unprecedented in the annols of the weather bureau here.

Milwaukee—Surprising 3 trucks in the act of leaving the Burlington Beverage Company at Burlington, Wis., with loads of alleged beer for Chicago, four federal prohibition agents, after a chase of six miles, seized one of the trucks and arrested the driver. The other two trucks got away.

Chicago—Somewhere along the dark trails of interior Africa an American woman, Dr. Hilda Heller, is on her way alone to join her husband, Edmund Heller, in a white rhinoceros hunt in the Belgian Congo. Mrs. Heller, who is a daughter of the late Professor Hemp of Leland Standford University, has gained wide reputation as a big game hunter.

New York—One man was killed and another critically wounded by bullets fired in a free-for-all fight in a Stapleton, Staten Island, lunch wagon. Neither was a participant in the fight. They were shot while attempting to dodge the volley of lead exchanged between a gang of alleged robbers and their victims.

Chicago—Fielding Smith, 19 years old, arrested on a charge of blackmail after Jacob Franks, father of Robert Franks, for whose murder Nathan Leopold, Jr., and Richard Loeb now are serving life terms in prison, had received a letter demand-

New York—The airplane was described as the ambulance of the future by Colonel Robert Picque of the army health department in France. Colonel Picque and Colonel J. Uzac, both leaders in the movement for aerial hospitalization, are here on a visit as delegates to the annual meeting of the Military Surgeons Association.

Mexico City—President Obregon received in the ambassador room in the national palace, at the hands of the Japanese minister, the Choir of Chrysanthemum, a high order, conferred on him for notable service. The emperor of Japan sent his best wishes for the prosperity of Mexico and success of the Galles government. President Obregon replied that he considered the decoration a symbol drawing the two nations closer together.

New York—The American peace award founded by Edward W. Bok, announced that, looking forward to the opening of congress two weeks hence, it had resumed functioning for the immediate purpose of influencing the senate foreign relations committee to report the resolution which provides for United States adherence to the world court terms of the Harding-Hughes plan. The organization will conduct a campaign of education on the League of Nations.

Indianapolis—Charles G. Dawes, vice-president-elect, has accepted the vicechairmanship of the honorary committee created by the American Legion to assist in its campaign to raise an endowment fund of $5,000,000 to care for disabled World war veterans and orphans of fallen former service men. Others who will serve on the committee include Secretary of State Hughes, Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, Secretary of Commerce Hoover, Secretary of the Interior Work, Secretary of Agriculture Gore and Secretary of Labor Davis.

Montreal—Three persons are reported to have lost their lives in a fire caused by an explosion on the premises of the Mount Royol Extract Company, Ltd.

Natchez, Miss.—A fire which broke out at Willets, ten miles south of Natchez on the Lousiana side of the Mississippi river, destroyed the plant of the Black River Lumber Company, and other property and for a time threatened the entire town It was estimated the loss would exceed $600,000

Milwaukee, Wis.—Marking the second episode in the impending upheaval and reorganization of the local federal prohibition unit, which took definite form with the resignation of Clark M. Perry as director, United States Senator Irvine L. Lenroot dispatched to Washington recommendation for the appointment of Ray J. Nye of Superior as Mr. Perry's successor.

Seattle—Facing a payment of $1,145,525 March 1 for bond interest and redemption, Seattle's Municipal Street Railway is to go on a warrant basis December 25, railway officials have announced. Since the city acquired the railway system in 1919 for $15,000,000 the lines have paid out of revenues $6,254,000 in interest, stated officials, in addition to keeping up expenses for repairs.

Indianapolis, Ind.—"Utmost support" of the American Legion child welfare program and the campaign soon to be conducted for a $5,000,000 endowment fund for World war orphans and disabled veterans was pledged by Legion adjutants from all parts of the country at the closing session of their annual conference here. Plans for the endowment campaign were laid before the adjutants by National Commander James A. Drain and other officials.

Sports

Chicago—General dissatisfaction with the clouded championship of the Big Ten football conference, won by the University of Chicago this year, may force the schedule makers to make radical changes in their plans when they meet here early in December. Coach Alonzo Stagg's Maroons with only a mediocre team, went through six conference games undefeated and since every other Big Ten team was beaten at least once, Chicago claims the title.

Minneapolis—Minnesota's football team played before an audience of approximately 139,500 persons in the course of its six home exhibitions, which was more than twice the home attendance last year, according to figures compiled by Kenneth Wells, assistant ticket manager. The largest crowd witnessed the Michigan game, when 43,000 persons came to the Memorial stadium. Last year's total attendance at the Gopher home games was 63,059, and more than one-third of this number came to the Iowa game, the last home-coming tilt on Northrop field.

Urbana, Ill.—Harold "Red" Grange, all-American half-back and sensation of the football season just past, was elected captain of the 1925 Illinois football team at a banquet given the squad by the Campaign rotary club. Grange has played two seasons with the Illini, leading the Big Ten conference in scoring both years and scoring at least one touchdown in every game that he has entered. It is the first time in history, according to Illini athletic authorities, that a backfield star of the Grange magnitude has been selected to lead an Illinois team.

Foreign

Budapest—Stephen Horthy, son of Admiral Horthy, the Hungarian regent, a student in the polytechnic school, has been sentenced by the criminal court to four days imprisonment for duelling. Young Horthy's adversary was given a sentence of two days. The duel was the result of an argument.

Antwerp—The Ford automobile assembling plant, which supplies Belgium, Holland, Germany, Luxembourg and Switzerland was closed because of the new Belgian tariff which, officials of the plant say makes import duties prohibitive.

Manila—A bill passed by the Philippine legislature, known as the immigration law, under which the registration fee on all Chinese residents of the Philippine islands would be increased from 50 cents to $10, will be vetoed by Governor General Leonard Wood, he announced. The United States attorney general ruled the law was unconstitutional because of its retroactive provisions.

London—Vincenzo Gemito one of Italy's greatest artists, who has done sculptor work for half a dozen kings, has arrived in London almost penniless, ready to start life over again at the age of 72. He declares himself practically driven from his homeland after professional jealousy of rival artists made his life one of constant fear. He revealed how they had him imprisoned in an insane asylum for nine months 20 years ago in order to quench his great art.

Vienne—An Ullstein dispatch from Athens reports that the Jugoslavian minister, M. Marcovich, has been recalled by his government and no successor named in his place. He called on the premier, expressing deep regrets at leaving Athens, but he declared no concern should be felt over the recall and that a new minister will be named shortly. Diplomatic circles here, however, feel that the recall marks one more step in the development of the difficulties between the two Balkan states. There is a rumor that Saloniki has more to do with the departure of M. Marcovich than the recent clash over Macedonian minorities.

Paris—Ambassador Jules Jusserand will remain in Washington until after January 1 so that as dean of the diplomatic corps he will present New Year's congratulations to President Coolidge.

Weltevreden, Japan—The Dutch airman Vanderhoop, who started from Amsterdam on October 1, arrived here, completing a flight of more than 9,300 miles. Accompanied by a mechanic and an observer, he undertook the journey to test the possibilities of commercial aviation between Holland and Java

N. D. PRISONERS ATTEMPT ESCAPE

Precautions Of Penitentiary Officers Prevent Wholesale Escape

Bismarck, N. D.—Attempts to effect a wholesale escape from the North Dakota state penitentiary were frustrated Sunday night by guards and officials of the institution.

In the scuffle, one guard was struck with a blackjack while another was cut with a knife when attempts were made to keep the prisoners within the prison walls.

Preparedness for the jail break enabled prison officials to frustrate the plot. A deputy warden was in hiding and fired at the fleeing convicts when they made their dash for freedom.

Arthur Smith and Joseph Bell, each serving terms of 17 years for bank robbery, were said by prison authorities to have been the ringleaders of the effort to escape.

Reach Outer Gate.

The two convicts succeeded in reaching the outer gate of the penitentiary and forced the guard to give them his keys, but as they shouted to others to come forward, a deputy warden, in hiding, fired and they fled back into the prison.

The break came shortly after 6 p. m. when the convicts were being marched from the dining room to their cells.

Smith, armed with a blackjack made of rubber hose filled with lead, and Bell, armed with a knife taken from the prison twine plant, led the break. Smith struck at Theodore Hanson, a guard, who warded off a blow aimed at his head and caught it on his arm. He was temporarily disabled. Smith and Bell pressed forward, Bell slashing at Frank Carr, another guard, with his knife, cutting Carr across the hands.

Reaching the outer gates, Smith produced what appeared to be an automatic pistol and forced Henry McLaren to turn the prison keys over to him. It later developed that the pistol was a cleverly made wooden gun.

As McLaren turned over the keys, according to Warden J. J. Lee, Smith shouted, "Come on; I've got the keys." Ben Bailey, deputy warden, standing in the dark in the visitor's room a short distance away, fired his shotgun into the air, and Smith and Bell fled back into the cell house.

Though having no direct knowledge that the break was going to be attempted, Warden Lee declared that from rumors current he was suspicious, and took precautions to be prepared.

$250,000 LOSS IN OIL BLAZE

Breaks in Pipe Line Starts Conflagration—Watchman Dies of Shock.

Los Angeles.—One man is dead and oil derricks, machinery, tanks, and buildings valued at $250,000 are in ashes as the result of a fire which broke out in the Santa Fe Springs oil field south of here Sunday.

The dead man, who succumbed to heart disease seconded by the shock and excitement of the fire is J. Mills, 65, oil company watchman. The property destroyed included 11 derricks and other adjacent storage tanks, pumphouses, offices, and machinery.

The fire originated in the boiler house of a derrick belonging to the Belleview Oil syndicate, oil company officials said, with the breaking of a fuel oil feeder line. The fuel line immediately burst into flames at the break, and within a few minutes the blaze had spread from the Belleview property to adjacent derricks.

WIRELESS PHOTOS SUCCESS

American Invention Proved Complete Success in Tests.

New York.—Trans-Atlantic transmission of photographs by radio is a reality.

Portraits of President Coolidge, Premier Stanley Baldwin, the Prince of Wales, and Owen D. Young were among those dispatched by wireless from London Sunday during a public test conducted by the Radio Corporation of America. In its offices here a jiggling stylus drew the pictures on an oscillating cylinder and 20 minutes after each original had been put on the air in London, it was reproduced in New York.

Officials of the company say that the invention, an all American instrument, by which not only pictures but printed messages may be transmitted, is a complete success.

Egypt Accepts British Demands.

London.—Egypt has agreed to the outstanding terms previously unaccepted, which were laid down after the assassination of the sirdar, Sir Lee Stack. Messages to this effect, it is learned from authoritative sources, have been received from Lord Allenby, British high commissioner of Egypt. The situation, both in Egypt and the Sudan, continues quiet, according to the latest reports from newspaper correspondents, whose dispatches imply that further trouble in the Sudan, at any rate, is improbable.

THIS WOMAN RELIEVED FROM SUFFERING

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. A Remarkable Story

Dover, Del.—"I wish every woman would take your wonderful medicine as it has done so much good to me. I had cramps and faint spells and very bad pains. One day I was over to my neighbor's house and she told me I ought to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. So I went to the store on my way home and got a bottle, and took the first dose before supper. I have been taking it ever since, and you can hardly believe how different I feel. I had just wanted to lie in bed all the time, and when I started to brush up I would give out in about ten minutes. So you know how badly I felt. I used to go to bed at eight and get up at seven, still tired. Now I can work all day and stay up until eleven, and feel all right all the time. My housework is all I do in summer, but in winter I work in a factory. I have told a good many of my friends, and I have had three come to me and tell me they wouldn't do without the Vegetable Compound."

"IT IS TOO LATE"

SYNOPSIS.—Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Joan Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance. She is upset, through no fault of her own, and makes a trivial blunder at a critical moment. The patient dies and Doctor Lancaster accuses her of clumsiness. She is suspended, the action meaning the end of her hope of a career as a nurse. Without relatives or friends, and desperate, Joan, urged by her landlady, goes to Doctor Lancaster's office to ask him to overlook her blunder and reinstate her. She overhears a violent altercation between Doctor Lancaster and other men she does not see. Joan is struck by the favorable change in the appearance and demeanor of the doctor, recalling that at times in the hospital he has been gentle and thoughtful and at others supercilious and bullying. He tells her he can do nothing for her at the hospital, but offers her a position in a nursing institution in the country, telling her she can be of "great assistance" to him. A man named Myers demands she tell him what the doctor had said to her. She denies him the information, and he covertly threatens her. At the institution, which is owned by Doctor Lancaster, Joan finds Myers. He tells her he is the secretary. She instinctively dislikes and fears him. The only patient at the institute is a Mrs. Dana, demented but harmless. Joan is vaguely uneasy, feeling that there is some mystery about the place. Doctor Lancaster arrives. Joan accuses him of deceiving her, declaring her intention of leaving. He tells her he is the patient who needs her, saying he wants help in a "big fight," but makes no further explanation. She decides to stay. Evidently Doctor Lancaster is afraid of Myers.

—8—

"There is no reason why you should not see him because he happens to be with Mr. Myers."

"Well, Miss Wentworth, you see, Mr. Myers is his secretary, and there's always a lot of business to be done."

"Doctor Jenkins, Doctor Lancaster is in no condition to attend to business," said Joan. "What is the matter with him?"

The doctor looked right and left, as if trying to find some refuge. But the girl was standing in front of him, and he could not enter the buggy without pushing her away.

"Miss Wentworth, please don't ask me about the doctor," he said. "I do my best for him. It isn't in my power to do more than I am doing."

"It is in your power to help him to be master of himself. How can the most famous surgeon in the South come here and be at the mercy of a man like Myers?"

"Why, Miss Wentworth, you've got that wrong," protested Jenkins. "Mr. Myers is only the secretary. Mr. Myers does all he can for the doctor. We've got to keep the institute together, Miss Wentworth, and we're each doing our best. You see, the trust fund wasn't made over to the doctor. He was only in charge of it, and when the money was missing it worried him. And—and—"

He stopped, as if he had caught himself babbling about something that should not have been mentioned. Then, as Joan stood aside, he leaped into the vehicle. "Good morning," he muttered, raising his hat, and drove away furiously.

Joan remained where the buggy had been. She realized that for the present she could get no help from Jenkins.

He had seemed afraid, not for himself, but for Lancaster. What had Lancaster done, then, that he should be in the power of Myers? Had he embezzled the funds of the institute?

The question was an absurd one. It was unbelievable that Lancaster should be a thief; besides, the explanation would not solve the problem at all.

She went back to the verandah. She was resolved to reach the bottom of the mystery, for Lancaster's sake; to prove her loyalty although he had withdrawn his demand on her.

As she reached the front door she was startled to hear her name spoken in the matron's room. The speaker was Myers.

"But she knows nothing at all," Mrs Fraser was saying.

"She knows a good deal too much," Myers answered. "What do you suppose the doctor brought her here for, if not to try to publish his shame to the world?"

"Aye, his shame," repeated the matron bitterly. "It's hard work for three people to try to hold up one man, without a fourth coming in."

"Well, is that his game?" demanded the secretary. "Is it or isn't it?"

"We want a nurse. You know we've often tried to get one, Mr Myers, but they won't stay here. It's hard work taking care of the patients sometimes, when there's a rush."

"Rush!" repeated Myers scornfully. "Who'd rush to this old place with the doctor's reputation?"

"They do come, and the people trust him," said Mrs. Fraser, half crying.

"Yes," scoffed the other. "And the doctor still has his grandiose ideas about building up the institution—him that wrecked it."

"Well, that girl knows nothing, anyway."

"I tell you she means to help the doctor in his crazy plan of notoriety. She means to undo all our work in his own interests," cried Myers vehemently.

Joan walked away. She had overheard unwillingly, and enough to convince her that there was a mystery, with Myers at the bottom of it, and she had rightly sensed an enemy in him, and he in her. Now her mind was resolute to remain and fight for Lancaster. It was as if her decision, suddenly crystallized, had suddenly grown crystal-clear.

But she had not passed the entrance when the matron's door swung open violently and Myers came out. He stood confronting Joan with his insulting leer.

"Miss Wentworth," he began, "when you and I had our talk this morning you hadn't seen the doctor. You didn't know how things were situated, and I don't blame you. Now you've seen that the doctor needs a guardian. Well, I'm his guardian."

"I do not think that Doctor Lancaster needs a guardian, Mr. Myers," answered Joan, facing him steadily.

"See here, now, Miss Wentworth," said Myers, swallowing hard. "You don't get the drift of things, just as I thought. You think I'm trying to stand in the way of your work, when I'm only trying to reach a sort of working agreement to keep things in running order. That's my aim. Am I right?"

"I don't know whether you are right. I think you are extremely uncivil. Take off your hat!" flashed Joan.

Myers removed the hard hat from his head and stared at her in astonishment. He could not understand her sudden initiation of hostilities.

"Well, I reckon that's my nature, and I'm sorry," he said. He was trying to be conciliatory now. "I'm sorry if I get on your nerves, Miss Wentworth," he persisted, "but I wasn't brought up to be a ladies' man. However, I know my job, and I reckon you know yours. If you think I'm trying to stand between the doctor and you, come and see him right now."

"I have no complaint to make, and I have made none," said Joan.

"Come and see him," persisted Myers. "You're the nurse, and I guess it's up to you."

She looked at him, dismayed by his expression. "Is Doctor Lancaster worse?" she asked.

"Well, nothing that I didn't expect, but he might be better," said Myers, sneering.

He walked toward the door of Lancaster's room and opened it. Through the aperture Joan saw Lancaster stretched out in a large chair, his head bent forward on his breast, his limbs immobile. She hurried into the room.

But Myers preceded her to Lancaster's side. He raised the limp arm and turned up the sleeve. Joan saw that the skin was densely scarred with tiny punctures. Lancaster was breathing heavily, and beside him, upon a little table, was a syringe, and near that a little bottle containing a few drops of a pale fluid. Joan drew in her breath quickly. It was what she had feared.

"Morphine," said Myers. "He always does this when he comes home. Now you understand what I was trying to get at this morning, Miss Wentworth. I'm responsible for him. It's my job to keep him straight if I can. When I can't, I try. Now you see, perhaps, why he's lost his will power, and why I have to keep after him like a dog following his master. And I guess you won't think I'm trying to set him against you."

The bully in the man was coming to the surface again. He thrust out his head toward Joan.

"Because, if you do, I may as well say, Miss Wentworth, I'm the boss here. Understand that?" he continued, with a blustering air. "The doctor hires all sorts of people when he's like this, and it doesn't mean nothing. He can't pay out no salaries unless my O. K.'s on the vouchers. We want a nurse, and if you like to stay on you can. But if you stay you help me so far as the doctor's concerned, and you do what I tell you. That's straight. Is it clear or isn't it?"

Joan looked at him indifferently. "Help me put Doctor Lancaster on the bed," she said, "and then run and get me a hot-water bottle."

He scowled furiously, but he obeyed her. And all the while Joan sat at Lancaster's side watching him, her mind ran over the questions that were puzzling her.

Why had Myers spoken of Lancaster as coming home, when he lived in Avonmouth?

Who had hired him to be the doctor's keeper?

And with whom had Doctor Lancaster been speaking so bitterly in his consulting room that evening when Joan called at the house?

Chapter VI

[illegible] for hours [illegible] sometimes [illegible] Myers had come in and spoken to her. But she never answered him. As the pulse strengthened she let her mind work upon the problem again. Lancaster had taken an immense overdose, one inconceivable in the ordinary morphine habitue. And he must have taken it during the brief period when Myers was with him; he must have taken it as soon as he got back to his room. Why had Myers permitted it?

At last Lancaster opened his eyes. His gaze fell upon Joan's face, at first without recognition, then with wonder.

"Water!" he gasped, after a few ineffectual attempts to speak.

Joan drew a glassful and gave it to him, and then another. Lancaster gulped down the liquid greedily. Presently he sat up, stood on his feet, and groped his way to the chair.

"I'm sorry," he said, looking at Joan with a whimsical expression. "I should have told you."

"Doctor Lancaster, I am ashamed of you," said Joan.

"God knows I'm ashamed of myself," he burst out fretfully. "Miss Wentworth, in the third drawer of that desk, beneath a pile of letters, you'll find a bottle—"

"No," said Joan decisively.

She knew by the wholly unnecessary secrecy in the concealment, characteristic of the drug habitue, that Lancaster had gone a long way down the declivity.

"Miss Wentworth, you misunderstand me. It's an antidote for alkaloidal poisoning. I was experimenting with a new drug."

Joan found herself sobbing, and she was astounded. It was the wreck of the man's moral nature that was unbearable. She saw the latent fineness in him, and it was as if the needless lie was the voice of the morphine devil that spoke through his lips.

Lancaster looked distressed. "Miss Wentworth, you had better leave me and go back to Avonmouth on the evening train," he said. "I ought never to have brought you here. It was pure selfishness on my part. Miss Wentworth, please don't cry. Go away now, and we'll talk it over before you start for the station."

"If I go away," wept Joan, "you'll take another hypodermic."

"I pledge you my word of honor no," said Lancaster, with almost ingenuous candor. "I am really not accustomed to such a thing—that is why it knocked me out. I have been suffering from insomnia, and I tried a new alkaloid—not morphine, you know, but a derivative—for the benefit of my patients."

The words came from his lips so glibly that Joan was almost convinced—would have been, had not the first lie been different. She hesitated. She had no intention of leaving the room, but she turned away.

Lancaster misunderstood her action. With incredible swiftness his hand shot out toward the little bottle. He had uncorked it and plunged in the syringe before the girl could snatch it away.

"Your word of honor!" said Joan.

He leaned back in his chair and looked at her with amusement.

"Miss Wentworth," he said, "you are a nurse. Surely you are aware that I am not to be trusted, that my word of honor is worthless? That I am essentially devoid of honesty and decency? Don't you know that this accursed thing"—he pointed toward the bottle—"robs men of their honor and self-respect, and lowers them beneath the beasts?"

He spoke as if at a clinic and quite impersonally; there was the shadow of a whimsical smile about his lips, which twitched, nevertheless, with pain.

"That does not refer to you," answered Joan. "You asked me to help you in the biggest fight of your life. Well, I am going to help you in that fight."

"It is too late," said Lancaster.

"Never!" replied Joan valiantly.

"You don't understand, Miss Wentworth. That's the mistake all people make in trying to cure us. Don't you know that a man or woman never becomes a victim to a drug except from sleeplessness, or physical pain, or under stress of mental anguish? If you could cure me the old trouble would still be there. I should fall a victim again. Life is worthless to me, Miss Wentworth," he ended, quite simply.

The truth is out at last. The morphine habit is hard to cure. Will Joan succeed?

Many Legends Treat of Woman's Creation

Woman's first appearance has been a popular subject of legends. The Phoenician myth of creation is founded on the story of Pygmalion and Galatea. There the first woman was carved out of ivory by the first man, and then endowed with life by Aphrodite, says the Kansas City Star.

The Greek theory of the creation of woman, according to Hesiod, was that Zeus, as a cruel jest, ordered Vulcan to make woman out of clay, and then induce the various gods and goddesses to invest the clay doll with all their worst qualities, the result being a lovely thing.

The Scandinavians say that Odin, Vili and Ve, the three sons of Bor, were walking along the beach they found two sticks of wood, one of ash and one of elm. Sitting down, the gods shaped man and woman out of these sticks, whittling the woman from the elm and called her Embla.

75% of disease avoided through internal cleanliness

WHEN you are constipated poisons are formed in the accumulated food waste, and reach all parts of the body. The first results, headaches, biliousness, a feeling of "heaviness", etc., serve as warnings of graver diseases to follow if this intestinal poisoning continues unchecked.

This is why intestinal specialists state that constipation is the primary cause of three-quarters of all illness, including the gravest diseases of life.

Physicians Advise Lubrication for Internal Cleanliness

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste, and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless. Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

Just thirty inches tall and growing every day!

This is one of the thousands of babies weighed, measured and given a thorough physical examination at the Free Infants' and Children's Clinics held throughout the state during the past year by the Minnesota Public Health Association and its affiliated county organizations.

His majesty, the baby, as well as his older sisters and brothers, has an important place in the campaign for "health for all" supported by Christmas Seals. A realization that tuberculosis germs cannot find a breeding place in healthy bodies has led the state and county associations to give particular attention to promoting health in children as part of their preventive program.

"Keep the well child well; treat the frail child early," is the clinic slogan, and the educational campaign, which supplements it, aims to secure for every child in the state his birthright of good health. A more extensive clinic program, starting with the child and reaching all ages up through adult life, is planned for 1925, with money supplied by Christmas Seals.

CAMPAIGN SAVES LIVES.

Nearly 1,000 lives saved in 1923!

This is one result of Minnesota's organized campaign against tuberculosis, according to a report just made by Dr. Robinson Bosworth, Executive Secretary of the State Advisory Commission for Sanatoria, to the Minnesota Public Health Association.

The report states that 985 less people in Minnesota died from tuberculosis last year than would have died had the death rate continued to be as high as it was before the tuberculosis campaign began. This savings in human life, which in a cold dollar and cent calculation is worth nearly five million dollars to the state, is, according to the report, due to the combined efforts of the tuberculosis sanatoria and the educational campaign, which is made possible through the sale of Christmas Seals. The state death rate from tuberculosis has been reduced over one-third in the last ten years.

The fact that tuberculosis has killed 51,302 people in Minnesota since 1900 is one of the startling facts stated in the report.

In 1923 alone, despite the marked decline in the death rate in recent years, 1855 Minnesota people died of tuberculosis, and it is estimated that there are 17,000 active cases in the state now. To find these cases, many of which are not suspected as yet by the victims themselves, in the early and most curable stages; to teach the importance of early and proper treatment; and to continue the intensive educational campaign against the White Plague are part of the 1925 anti-tuberculosis campaign to be financed by Christmas Seals.

HEALTH
Christmas
1924

"How far this little Christmas Seal will throw its light" during 1925, if the sale is a success, is indicated by the following activities, which form only a part of the plans for next year:

Free clinics in every county in the state.

A follow-up nurse to advise clinic cases needing attention.

Extensive school program, emphasizing prevention.

Demonstration Public Health Nurses.

Health literature for general distribution.

The Northwestern Health Journal.

Exhibits, lectures and motion pictures.

Special Health Campaigns.

A number of counties, in addition to the above program, have planned some specific local health project to be supported through their share of the Christmas Seal funds.

150,000 lbs Dressed Turkeys Wanted

We have made a sale of 150,000 lbs of dressed turkeys for the Christmas holidays, so it will take a lot of them to fill this order. In making a sale of this kind it enables us to pay more money, than we could otherwise.

Come in and get our prices, before selling elsewhere, for we know we can please you.

Bring your chickens, turkeys, ducks, geese, hides and wool to the Peterson-Biddick Co. and receive highest market prices.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that default has been made in the conditions of a mortgage executed by Morris A. Olson, mortgagor, to The Lawerence Mortgage Company, a Corporation, mortgagee, dated March 1st, 1920, and recorded in the Office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on April 1st, 1920, at 1 o'clock P. M., in Book 100 of Mortgages, on Page 21 thereof; that such default consists in the non-payment of the interest that fell due September 1st, 1921 on the note described in and secured by said mortgage when the same fell due and all subsequent payments are now in default; that the mortgagee has elected to declare and has declared the whole amount principal and interest upon said mortgage due and payable; that the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at this date is Eleven Hundred twenty and 50-100 Dollars ($1120.50).

That the premises described in and covered by said mortgage are described as follows, to-wit: South Half of the Northeast Quarter (S1-2 NE1-4) of Section Twenty-five (25), Township One Hundred Fifty-five (155) North, of Range Forty (40) West, of the Fifth Principal Meridian in Minnesota, containing Eighty (80) acres, more or less, according to the United States Government Survey thereof, situate in Marshall County, Minnesota.

That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, said mortgage will be foreclosed by the sale of said premises, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, by the sheriff of Marshall County, Minn., at the West front door the Marshall County Court House in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on Monday, the 12th day of January, 1925, at ten o'clock A. M. to satisfy the amount then due on said mortgage, together with the costs of such sale and Fifty Dollars, Attorney's fees, stipulated in said mortgage.

Valuable Hints to Patrons
Delivering Cream to our Creamery
Pasteurization is very important, yet to have it done in an inefficient way is worse than not at all. In view of the fact we ask the cooperation and urge upon all patrons to try and do their share to help us. First— You must try and bring a 1st grade cream and have same delivered in the forenoon if possible. Second— Help us to get our average test 30 per cent or better. Sweet cream can be pasteurized more efficiently than sour, and high testing cream will save you more money for the reason that with a low testing cream it is impossible to churn it without considerable butterfat being drained out with the buttermilk.

Obituary

Tenore Ovidia was born in Norway on Jan 11th., 1878. She came to America in June 1893 and made her home in Grand Forks, N. Dak. In December 1896 she was united in marriage with Gunder Sorter and since then they have made their home on his homestead in this township, until her death on Dec. 1st.

Four children were born to this union: Mrs. Ben Thorfin of Wanaska, Minn., Mrs. Hilmer Davidson of Holt, and Percy and Melvin at home.

Mrs. Sorter leaves to mourn her death, the grief stricken husband and children, three brothers, John Erickson of Goodridge, Minn., Andrew Erickson of Valley City, N. Dak. and Bernard Erickson of Kvedefjord, Norway, two sisters, Mrs. Edwin Erickson of Holt, and Sara Hauge, Harstad, Norway, also numerous friends and neighbors, all of whom will greatly miss her but she will be especially missed in the home where she labored so many years as a good wife and mother.

The funeral services were held at the home and at the Free church in Ringbo on Thursday afternoon, Rev. Ordahl officiating, and the interment was made in the Ringbo cemetery. Relatives and friends from a distance present at the funeral were: Mr. and Mrs. Andreas Erickson, Valley City, N. Dak.; Mr. and Mrs. Ben Torfin, Mr. and Mrs. Abe Sorter and Andrew Mortenson all of Wanaska, Minn.; Mr. and Mrs. Elef Aakra and Mr. and Mrs. Jorgen Vraa of Goodridge, Minnesota; Hans Hanson and Adelia Aakre of Warren, Minn.; Mrs. Samuel Swendson of Badger, and Elef Gunderson of Crookston, Minn.

The News extends sincere sympathy to the grief stricken husband, children and other relatives of the deceased.

"This body lying stiff and stark,
Shall once rise upward from the dark
And swiftly mount up to the skies,
E'en as the Heavenly spirit flies."

"Jesus' blood and righteousness
My beauty and my stately dress,
With which in glory I shall stand,
When entering heaven my Fatherland."

Card of Thanks

We wish to extend our heartfelt thanks to our friends for their help and sympathy in our great breavement, also for the many beautiful flowers for the funeral, for the songs rendered and for the sermon.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Zumbrota—A chapter of the Goodhue county Isac Walton League was organized here.

Slayton—Prompt action of the local fire department saved the local Catholic church from destruction by fire.

Hutchinson—The McLeod county fair will continue as a four days session and will be held in September 1925.

Northfield—A. Wilberscnied, head of the Twin City Milk Producers' plant, was instantly killed when a steam radiator in the plant burst.

Long Prairie—Representatives of a large pickling concern were surveying the field here regarding the establishment of a pickle factory.

Albert Lea—Ten year old Bruce, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Anderson, of near Freeborn, lost his right arm in a corn shredder accident.

Red Wing—Red Wing's second annual poultry and pet show just closed has been a great success, and attracted large crowds of visitors.

Waseca—Dedication of the new $350,000 Waseca high school took place with exercises that terminated the Educational Week program.

Cambridge—George Whitney, 13-year-old son of well known Cambridge people, was killed by the accidental discharge of a rifle he was cleaning.

Barnesville—Plans for the re-organization and reopening of the Citizens State Bank of Barnesville will be made soon.

Aitkin — The taxpayers of this county will organize a taxpayers' league to study the ever increasing tax burden question. Recommendations will be made to the legislature.

Red Wing—The Red Wing Millwork company is furnishing the woodwork for the new Book Cadillac hotel at Detroit, Mich., which when completed will be the tallest hotel in the world.

Northfield—After having cut ice to furnish Northfield residents with summer comfort for 50 years past, Port Sidwell, local resident, announces his retirement from the ice business.

Little Falls—The Morrison county fair next year will be of three days duration instead of four days, as has been the custom for several years, and will be August 28, 29 and 30.

Mankato—The new Bethlehem Lutheran church, erected this year by the congregation presided over by Rev. Edward Johnson, was dedicated Sunday afternoon.

Rochester—Rochester's new $30,000 water tower on College hill has been formally delicated and opened for public inspection. The local post of the American Legion had charge for the day, and souvenir programs will be distributed.

Owatonna—The date for the sale of a $200,000 issue of bonds to finance further construction of the municipal electric light, power and heating plant was postponed from December 2 to 16 by the city council at a special meeting.

Hibbing—Of importance to the mining fraternity of the range is the announcement that the various mining operations of the M. A. Hanna company for the Mesaba range will be conducted from the Hibbing office and the Virginia office will be discontinued.

Litchfield—A golden eagle with a wing spread of 7 feet 4 inches was on display in a local store. The big bird had been observed about East Lake Ripley for a number of weeks and scared the wild ducks in that vicinity. O. W. Ringdahl brought down the bird with a rifle.

Mankato—The body of a baby was found in the waiting room of the Omaha deport here by the baggage man. Dr. G. A. Dahl, county coroner, was called. All marks of identification on the box had been erased and no clue could be found by authorities.

Lafayette—Bandits drove into Lafayette, held the whole town a bay for omre thain two hours, and wrecked the interior of the Farmers' State bank by exploding 18 charges of nitroglycerine in an unsuccessful attempt to reach $8,000 in the vault.

Redwood Falls—At the annual meeting of the Redwood County Agricultural Association F. G. Hubbard presented his resignation as president of the organization and Rudolph Stensval was named to the position. W. A. Hauck was re-elected secretary.

St. Cloud—The St. Cloud Chamber of Commerce has set on foot an effort to induce the city commissioners immediately to take steps to obtain an adequate supply of pure water, and to that end has strongly recommended the well system.

Minneapolis—Negotiations for the purchase of the first of several motorbus companies operating in Minnesota by a syndicate of Twin City business men are reported completed, with indications that much of the $10,000,000 bus property in the state is likely ultimately to be involved.

Windom—A valuable dairy cow owned by W. L. Vought, farmer near Storden, died from a peculiar cause. The cow's heart was found to be greatly enlarged and upon being dissected a casing nail was found imbedded in the center of it.

Mantorville—Station 9CGH, Mantorville, Minn., is the newest broadcasting station in the state capable of carrying the voice a distance of 400 to 500 miles. The station was built and is owned and operated by H. Leon Bergey, of the Mantorville Express, and is licensed by the government.

Long Prairie—Orville Hart of this place was electrocuted while working on the power lines at Pillager. Details of the accident will never be known, as he was found dead near his work.

Tracy—The eleventh annual corn and grain show, under the auspices of the Tri-County Farm Improvement association, closed its five-day session with a large attendance.

Palisade—Assay reports of examinations made from samples of the Murphy mine east of Palisade place a value of $15.00 to the ton of ore, and $3,000 to the ton of rock.

Hendricks—The local American Legion post has taken over the work of collecting funds in this vicinity for the Knute Nelson memorial.

Chisholm—A. H. Bridges, formerly well known here, was killed by a tractor on a farm in Florida recently. Bridges inherited the farm and went to look after it, being killed soon after his arrival.

Buhl—About one hundred officials of more than 15 range villages met here to discuss with the legislative representatives matters of importance to the great Iron section, which will be brought to the attention of the legislature this winter.

Cambridge—The annual meeting of the Isanti County Fair association was held here. After paying all premiums, etc., the association will have a deficit of about $1700, most of which has been carried for several years.

Redwood Falls—The stockholders of the Redwood County Agricultural association, which conducts "the best county fair in Minnesota" according to its claims, held a very successful meeting here and made plans for the 1925 fair.

Warren—The question of sugar beet raising is being given considerable attention by Marshall county agriculturalists, and it is probable that an effort will be made to get this industry started here soon.

St. Paul—The St. Paul chief of police and the Ramsey county sheriff and county attorney, were asked by Mayor Arthur E. Nelson to meet with him to map out a campaign against liquor law violations in St. Paul.

Albert Lea — Thirteen thousand ducks and four thousand geese were gathered at a local shipping company's plant one day last week, indicating that the poultry business is an important one in this section of the state.

Jackson—Truck bandits have been active in this section of the state. Several stores in small villages in this neighborhood have been looted by a gang of bandits, who work at night and haul the loot away in trucks.

Alexandria—The Douglass County Agricultural association at its annual meeting here re-elected the old officers and checked up the affairs of the past year, which were found in fine shape.

Thief River Falls—Rumor has it that a new railway from International Falls to this city will be built in the near future. It is said that the right-of-way is being asquired and that part of the road will be built in 1935 and the balance the following year.

Zumbrota—The Zumbrota fire department had a chance to use their new motor driven fire equipment very soon after it was installed in their city, and found it to be the clear thing in fighting fires.

Albert Lea—The Albert Lea Rotary club entertained about 80 teachers and a number of high school pupils at a social function, that proved one of the most enjoyable parties ever held in the city.

Dundas—This village boasts of two of Minnesota's oldest settlers, Job. J. Chester and William F. Chester settled in Rice County in 1854 and have lived in the county continuously since that time. The farm home has been in possession of the Chesters for 70 years.

Thief River Falls—The dairymen of Pennington county will form a cow testing association at once, and it is expected that every farmer in the county engaged in dairying will enroll.

Glenwood—Because of the prevalence of smallpox in this section, the board of county commissioners passed a resolution offering free vaccination to all who wanted to avail themselves of the opportunity. The cost of the vaccination will be paid by the county.

Heron Lake—A snow white wild duck, with a metal band clamped on one leg, bearing the number 232126, was shot by a local hunter near here. The duck was shaped like a mallard, but was a freak inasmuch as it was clear white.

Thief River Falls—Heavy shipments of grain continue at this point, according to P. J. Keating, inspector in charge of the work. 225 cars were inspected in the Soo yards alone and four trains each of 60 cars left this city within three hours. The record number of cars inspected here in any one day was 300 early in October.

St. Paul—The reopening of two banks, one in New Ulm, the other in Searles was announced Saturday. The Farmers and Merchants' State bank of New Ulm, reopened with a capital of $30,000, and deposits of $351,000. The Searles State bank will open its doors with a capital of $10,000.

Cloquet—Cloquet will this year have the honor of presenting to the city of Chicago a municipal Christmas tree. The tree, a balsam, and a beautiful specimen, is coming from the state experiment station, southwest of the city. It is more than 40 feet high and measures about a foot through the trunk at the base.

Minneapolis—Governor J. A. O. Preus will remain in Minnesota, engaging in business, when he retires as governor January 6, he has announced. He has been in public service since his graduation from the University of Minnesota in 1906

RIGID ECONOMY IS URGED IN MESSAGE BY THE PRESIDENT

Coolidge Advises Congress to Repeal Publicity Section of Income Tax Law—Executive Covers Wide Field in Outlining Policy for Next Four Years.

Washington.—President Coolidge advised congress in his annual message that perhaps the most important work it could do at its present session would be to practice such economy as to make possible a reduction of taxes for the next fiscal year.

"The government can do more to remedy the economic ills of the people by a system of rigid economy in public expenditures," he said, "than can be accomplished through any other action."

The President renewed his plea for American adherence to the Permanent Court of International Justice; declared the United States would not join the League of Nations; appealed for support for the European reparations settlement plan, and repeated his declaration of opposition to cancellation by the United States of the debts owed the country by foreign nations.

The text of the President's message, which was read to congress, in part follows:

The nation holds a position unsurpassed in all former human experience. This does not mean that we do not have any problems.

Our domestic problems are for the most part economic. We have our enormous debt to pay, and we are paying it. We have the high cost of government to diminish, and we are diminishing it.

We still owe over $21,000,000,000, the cost of the national government is still about $3,500,000,000, and the national taxes still amount to about $27 for each one of our inhabitants. There yet exists this enormous field for the application of economy.

In my opinion the government can do more to remedy the economic ills of the people by a system of rigid economy in public expenditure than can be accomplished through any other action.

For Repeal of Publicity Act.

Combining discussion of tax revision with his statement on economy, the Executive declared publication of income tax payments to be "detrimental to the public welfare and bound to decrease public revenues," and urged the repeal of that section of the revenue act.

If at the close of the present session the congress has kept within the budget which I propose to present, it will then be possible to have a moderate amount of tax reduction and all the tax reform that the congress may wish for during the next fiscal year. There is every prospect of an era of prosperity of unprecedented proportions.

Our country has a well-defined policy of reclamation established under statutory authority. This policy should be continued.

For Relief of Agriculture.

No more important development has taken place in the last year than the beginning of a restoration of agriculture to a prosperous condition.

The government cannot successfully insure prosperity or fix prices by legislative fiat. Every business has its risk and its times of depression.

The government has been constantly increasing its efforts for the relief and permanent establishment of agriculture on a sound and equal basis with other business.

Every effort must be made, both by government activity and by private agencies, to restore and maintain agriculture to a complete normal relationship with other industries.

It is my opinion that the support of agriculture is the chief problem to consider in connection with this property.

I should favor a sale of this property, or long-time lease.

The railways during the last year have made still further progress in recuperation from the war, with large gains in efficiency and ability expeditiously to handle the traffic of the country.

In my message last year I emphasized the necessity for further legislation with a view to expediting the consolidation of our railways into larger systems.

Simplify Labor Rules.

Another matter before congress is legislation affecting the labor sections of the transportation act.

It would be helpful if a plan could be adopted which, while retaining the practice of systematic collective bargaining with conciliation and voluntary arbitration of labor differences, could also provide simplicity in relations and more direct local responsibility of employees and managers.

I am of the opinion that the national law governing the choice of members of the congress should be extended to include appropriate representation of the respective parties at the ballot box and equality of representation on the various registration boards, wherever they exist.

During the last session of the congress legislation was introduced looking to the payment of the remaining claims generally referred to as the French spoliation claims.

The United States ought to pay its debts. I recommend action by the congress which will permit of the payment of these remaining claims.

Wage Earner Aided.

Two very important policies have been adopted by this country which, while extending their benefits also in other directions, have been of the utmost importance to the wage earners. One of these is the protective tariff. The other is a policy of more recent origin and seeks to shield our wage earners from the disastrous competition of a great influx of foreign peoples.

This has been done by the restrictive immigration law. This saves the American job for the American workmen.

The merit system has long been recognized as the correct basis for employment in our civil service. I believe that first, second and third-class postmasters, and without covering in the present membership the field force of prohibition enforcement should be brought within the classified service by statute law.

One way to save public money would be to pass the pending bill for the reorganization of the various departments.

Army and Navy.

Little has developed in relation to our national defense which needs special attention. Progress is constantly being made in air navigation and requires encouragement and development.

Under the limitation of armaments treaty a large saving in outlay and a considerable decrease in maintenance of the navy has been accomplished.

We should maintain the policy of constantly working toward the full treaty strength of the navy.

A special commission also is investigating the problem of petroleum oil for the navy.

I believe thoroughly in the army and navy, in adequate defense and preparation. But I am opposed to any policy of competition in building and maintaining land or sea armaments.

Says Veterans Deserve Best.

With the authorization for general hospitalization of the veterans of all wars provided during the present year, the care and treatment of those who have served their country in time of peril and the attitude of the government toward them is not now so much one of needed legislation as one of careful, generous and humane administration.

Through its officers the Legion will present to the congress numerous suggestions for legislation.

America has been one of the foremost nations in advocating tribunals for the settlement of international disputes of a justifiable character.

Recommendations contained in President Coolidge's message are:

Rigid economy.

Reduction of the cost of the government.

Repeal of the income tax publicity law.

Further tax reduction effective in the next fiscal year, provided congress helps create the necessary treasury surplus.

Reduction of the surtaxes on large incomes.

Improvement and flood control on inland waterways.

Continued negotiations with Canada for the building of the St. Lawrence waterway.

Enactment of the reclamation legislation called for by the fact-finding commission.

Legislation relative to agriculture as soon as the new agricultural commission can make recommendations.

Sale or lease of Muscle Shoals and creation of a subcommittee of the committees on agriculture of congress to negotiate with possible purchasers. Increase in the powers of the interstate commerce commission to stimulate consolidation of railroad systems.

Amendment of existing law relative to relations of railroads to labor.

Amendment of federal election laws to provide equal representation of all parties at the ballot box and on registration boards.

Establishment of a national police bureau.

Amendment of immigration law to permit families of citizens to enter the United States.

Protection of the negro in his full constitutional rights.

Extension of the civil service law by congress to include all postmasters and the prohibition-enforcement force.

Reorganization of the government departments.

Adequate national defense and preparation.

Sympathetic reception by congress for the legislative recommendations of the American legion.

International co-operation, but no membership in the League of Nations.

Membership in the Permanent Court of International Justice, with reasonable reservations.

Postponement of further disarmament conferences here until pending European proposals for conference in Europe is worked out.

England's Oldest Woman Seeks Man to Care for Her

Tiptree, England.—Mrs. Betsy Pennick, who was a debutante when Victoria became queen of England in 1837, is on the lookout for a husband. She is 106 years old and still going strong. Having just recovered from a period of illness, she says she wants someone to provide for her for the rest of her days.

Mrs Pennick was married eighty-six years ago, but has been a widow for forty years. She is thought to be the oldest of King Georges' subjects in England.

"Flu" Hits U. S. Army Horses at Ft. Sheridan

Fort Sheridan.—Shipping fever, a kind of equine influenza, which has killed two horses at Fort Sheridan, is alarming army officers. Twenty horses are sick from the malady, and it is feared it may spread to thoroughbreds recently purchased by the post

DAWES PLAN BACKERS WIN

German Republicans Decisively Carry In National Poll Taken Sunday.

Berlin.—The republican group in Germany won a victory in the national elections which were held throughout the country Sunday. Returns from practically all election districts showed the Socialists, Democrats, and Centrists ran decidedly ahead of the Nationalists, Communists, and Fascisti. The latter were practically wiped out.

Approximately 85 per cent of the electorate went to the polls to choose the new reichstag, the vote being the heaviest ever polled in Germany. Many disturbances between adherents of rival parties kept the police busy throughout Saturday night and Sunday.

Decisive Republican Victory.

Although there was a score of parties having candidates, the chief issue was between Republicans under the black, red, and gold banner, and the Monarchists under the black, white, and red. The former group won so decisively that it will be possible to form a republican or middle regime which will have a clear majority and not have to kowtow to the Nationalists as was the case last summer when Chancellor Marx had to make concessions to save the Dawes plan.

If the Socialists, Centrists, Democrats and Bavarian Folks parties join in coalition they can resist opposition from the Nationalists or any combination of their political foes.

As the result of Sunday's election the Nationalists are the second largest party in the reichstag but a coalition will render this negligible. It was a jazz election with every new device known to politicians employed to stir popular enthusiasm and attract voters to the polls. Berlin was literally ankle deep in posters before Sunday was over.

N. D. FARMER DIES OF BURNS

Tipped Lantern Sets Fire to House in Which Farmer Dies.

Valley City, N. D.—David Daily, farmer, whose charred body was found on his farm, five miles south of Urbana, late Saturday by neighbors, came to his death when he fell exhausted while trying to fight flames in his home, officers decided after an investigation.

No coroner's inquest will be held, it was said.

The body was found by Charles Maier, a neighbor, who went to the Daily home to secure tools. He notified the sheriff, who went to the scene with the coroner.

From information obtained, the man's life was snuffed out some time Friday, December 5, as there was evidence that the stock had not been attended to on Saturday.

A tipped over lantern was still burning on the floor when the body was discovered. It led authorities to believe that a lighted lantern had tipped over, setting fire to the house; that Daily had fought the flames until he fell exhausted. He was lying face downward. His hair and the entire upper part of his body were badly burned.

OBJECTIONS TO BILL ARE ME

Underwood Offers Changes to Pave Way for Early Vote.

Washington.—Amendments meeting the major objections raised by Secretary Weeks to the Underwood Muscle Shoals bill were offered in the senate by the author of that measure, Senator Underwood, Democrat, of Alabama.

With the more important of the administration's objections to the bill thus removed, leaders on both sides in the senate are hopeful of an early vote.

One amendment extends the time for the leasing of the plant by the war secretary from next July to next September 1. Another changes the requirements as to the production of nitrates for fertilizer so that instead of 10,000 tons the first year, there would be 10,000 tons in the third year.

Senator Underwood explained that a fertilizer plant would have to be constructed and that in the usual course this would require two years. In the fourth year the lessee would be required to turn out 20,000 tons of nitrate, in the fifth year 30,000 tons, and thereafter 40,000 tons annually.

Eighty Millions for Roads

Washington.—Eighty million dollars for road construction is carried in the annual agricultural appropriation bill as reported to the house. This amount which would be available for expenditure during the coming fiscal year is $61,000,000 over the amount provided in last year's bill.

Officers Named in Liquor Theft.

Chicago.—That one army captain and several lieutenants of a military guard posted at the government's warehouse here, where a band of men raided a $3,000,000 supply of rare liquors last week, will be involved in the theft, was indicated Monday by federal authorities investigating. Approximately $850,000 worth of liquors held in the warehouse, an army quartermaster depot, was stolen in the raid. Rolling steel doors weer cut into by the band of robbers and the liquor carried away in trucks.

The Actor's Christmas Party

By H. Lucius Cook

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

ALL of the actors of the Zoroaster Stock company were good, but perhaps Billy Kelly was the best liked by the townspeople. Billy had been there six weeks, now, and was living at Mrs. Perkins' on Center street. Hence Center street was particularly thrilled at this time, because it had never before harbored a real live actor, and it could not quite get used to the idea.

Mrs. Perkins was a respectable middle-aged widow who had to take a few roomers to help out on expenses. She was not quite sure that it was right to have Billy rooming there, as she had an inherited prejudice against actors, but he paid twice as much as she had ever had before for the rooms, did not cause any extra bother, and so far as she could determine, was a human being much like the rest of us.

It did seem strange to her, however, that a young unmarried man should receive one hundred and fifty dollars a week when Mr. Perkins with his family had earned only that much a month. She wondered if it was honest. And then, too, she did not always know just what to make of Billy's attentions to her. Why, one time when she had fallen asleep on the sofa without a covering, he had gone to his own room and got his genuine Japanese silk kimona and covered her with it. She had found it over her when she woke up.

Mrs. Perkins had just finished telling this and several other incidents to the Ladies' Aid society, when one of the progressive ladies asked:

"Well, what are we to do with him for Christmas? It doesn't seem right not to do anything, when he is away from his people and all."

Everyone else had been thinking the same thing, but had not dared mention it, and none of them had any suggestions to make. No one dared ask him to dinner (they were so shy), and Mrs. Perkins herself, who really should have asked him, had decided to go to the hotel so as not to have to do so. They certainly could not give him ties or socks, as Mrs. Perkins assured them that he had hundreds of socks and thousands of ties, which everyone readily believed, as they had never seen him dressed twice the same.

It certainly looked like a cold Christmas for Billy. But next door to Mrs. Perkins lived a dear old maid who had been housekeeper for the Wellers for many years. Every Christmas she made mittens for all the children in the neighborhood, and when they grew too big for mittens, she gave candy to the girls and neckties to the boys. She was a community institution, but nobody ever thought of her in connection with Billy.

But when Christmas morning arrived, and Center street was busy with its toys, Billy had not been forgotten. The Perkins children were just opening their packages from the housekeeper next door when one of them discovered an envelope for Billy. He darted upstairs, and timidly knocked on the actor's door and slipped the envelope under.

"What could it be?" wondered Mrs. Perkins, for she knew it was no Christmas card.

She had not long to wonder, however, for Billy soon came running down flourishing a crisp new dollar bill which he had found in the envelope, and called to one of the children coming he told Mrs. Perkins of the welcome present, and how it had suggested to him to give a party next door in honor of the housekeeper. He told her to take the children over there quickly, as he would be back in twenty minutes.

True to his word, he was there in twenty minutes, and with him the whole Ladies' Aid society, and, to the delight of everyone, a whole gallon of ice cream which he and the kindly housekeeper served to all assembled, with many jokes and much merriment. Then Billy sang some rousing Christmas songs, kissed the housekeeper on the brow and taxied all the ladies home.

He had so many invitations to dinner he had to refuse them all, but he was not sorry for this as he joined Mrs. Perkins at the hotel, and he really liked her best of all.

Might Have Been Worse

"What did your wife give you for Christmas?"

"Nothing."

"That was tough."

"Well, it might have been a necktie or a smoking jacket."

WOMAN SO ILL COULD NOT WORK

Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Stopped Her Suffering and Restored Her Health

Momence, Illinois.—"I surely can recommend your medicine to other women who have female weakness, as it has helped me very much in every way possible. I was working in a dining room in town, and sometimes I could not do my work; had pains in the lower part of my body and had to stay in bed. One of my neighbors told me what good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for her, and it has surely done wonders for me. I hope all women who suffer will take my advice as the Vegetable Compound has done so much to bring back my vigor and strength."—Mrs. ALBERT E. DESCHAUD, Momence, Illinois.

Over 121,000 women have so far replied to our question, "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?" 98 per cent. of these replies answer "Yes."

That is 98 out of every 100 women who take this medicine for the ailments for which it is recommended are benefited by it. For sale by druggists everywhere.

Permanent roads are a good investment —not an expense

The High Cost of Postponing Permanent Highway Building

Poor motor roads stifle industry and agriculture; waste huge sums annually in high maintenance costs, and greatly increase gasoline, tire and repair bills.

There is not a state, not a county, not a community, that isn't paying a heavy price for having too few permanent roads.

There are still many sections of the country—even whole states—that are trying to operate twentieth century traffic over nineteenth century roads.

This is costing millions of dollars every year, and will keep on costing millions until we have well developed permanent highway systems everywhere.

Even what we often call the more progressive communities are far behind the demands of modern highway traffic with its 16,000,000 motor vehicles.

From the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Canada to Mexico, we need more Concrete roads —the roads for twentieth century traffic.

Your highway officials want to be of the greatest possible service to you. Get behind them with ways and means that will provide more Concrete roads and streets. Such an investment will pay you big dividends year after year.

"ARE YOU A WITCH?"

SYNOPSIS. — Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr. John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Joan Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance. She is upset, through no fault of her own, and makes a trivial blunder at a critical moment. The patient dies and Doctor Lancaster accuses her of clumsiness. She is suspended, the action meaning the end of her hope of a career as a nurse. Without relatives or friends, and desperate, Joan, urged by her landlady, goes to Doctor Lancaster's office to ask him to overlook her blunder and reinstate her. She overhears a violent altercation between Doctor Lancaster and other men she does not see. Joan is struck by the favorable change in the appearance and demeanor of the doctor, recalling that at times in the hospital he has been gentle and thoughtful and at others supercilious and bullying. He tells her he can do nothing for her at the hospital, but offers her a position in a nursing institution in the country, telling her she can be of "great assistance" to him. A man named Myers demands she tell him what the doctor had said to her. She denies him the information, and he covertly threatens her. At the institution, which is owned by Doctor Lancaster, Joan finds Myers. He tells her he is the secretary. She instinctively dislikes and fears him. The only patient at the institute is a Mrs. Dana, demented but harmless. Joan is vaguely uneasy, feeling that there is some mystery about the place. Doctor Lancaster arrives. Joan accuses him of deceiving her, declaring her intention of leaving. He tells her he is the patient who needs her, saying he wants help in a "big fight," but makes no further explanation. She decides to stay. Evidently Doctor Lancaster is afraid of Myers. Joan discovers that the doctor is a victim of the morphine habit. Joan takes charge of him, helping him to overcome temporarily his craving for the drug. Myers accuses her of "meddling," but she refuses to leave or to give up her care of Lancaster.

"For happiness, perhaps—I don't know. But not for duty. Your life is to be used, Doctor Lancaster, for the sake of the people, and I am going to help you use it. Your wonderful skill—"

He groaned at the words. Joan saw that, though he was suffering physically, there was some mental trouble which her words had evoked.

"Doctor Lancaster," she said, "the first thing you have to do is to use your will. And I am going to give you your first test, a little one only. It will last thirty seconds. Can you put forth your will for just that length of time?"

He fixed his eyes anxiously on hers and nodded. Yet she saw them waver toward the bottle.

"I am going to cross the room," she said. "Don't stir a finger till I return."

She heard Myers in the hall, and, going to the door, she turned the key. She heard Myers halt near her door. But she had no time to think of him. She went back to Lancaster, whose hands were strained hard against the arms of the chair.

"Well done!" she said.

"Miss Wentworth, I must have that hypodermic now."

"I want you to wait. Wait half an hour, Doctor Lacaster.

"I can't!" he cried, starting up. "I tell you I must have it. After an overdose one must have a smaller one. It will set me up nicely. Just half the quantity, Miss Wentworth."

"In half an hour," said Joan.

He sprang to his feet, shaking and furious. "Give me that bottle at once!" he cried.

"In half an hour."

Lancaster sat down. "Confound you, why ever did you come here?" he asked. "Suppose that I discharge you?"

"I shall not go, Doctor Lancaster. We have covered that point in our conversation already."

Then, seeing his distress, she went on rapidly: "Listen to me, Doctor Lancaster. You brought me here upon an impulse, because you had no one whom you could trust. You wanted to fight and you wanted me to fight with you. Well, I am going to do it, and we are going to win." She took out her watch and laid it on the table. "In twenty-five minutes you shall have half a dose. Then we shall have won the first skirmish. O, Doctor Lancaster, fight like a man and help us win!"

She spoke with so much earnestness that she kindled his enthusiasm. "Yes, we'll make the fight!" he cried, with blazing eyes. "If only I had had you long ago!"

He was in the full reaction from his despondency. He struck his fist emphatically upon the arm of the chair. "I'll be a man again!" he cried. "If you knew everything, Miss Wentworth, you might understand how a man can be caught in a snare of his own making. But I'll win, with your aid, and I'll be my own master again."

"You are your own master now, Doctor Lancaster. Always think that and remember it."

"My own master? When that hound follows me—"

"Mr. Myers is your servant."

Lancaster laughed harshly. "By heaven!" he cried, "I'll tell him so. Miss Wentworth, give me that dose now, so that I can feel like a man again and have the strength to send him about his business."

"It will give you strength," she answered, "but it will not make you yourself, your better self. You will no longer want to send him about his business."

Lancaster stared at her. "How do you know that?" he asked. "Are you a witch? It's true. But I can't wait any longer. I have waited fifteen minutes. Half an hour next time. Miss Wentworth, the third drawer—"

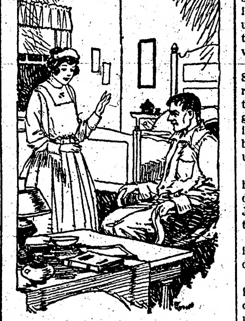
As her eyes went toward the desk he snatched up the bottle and hypodermic from the table. Joan caught at his wrist. But Lancaster had already plunged the syringe into the fluid, and he was upon his feet.

He tried to free his hand, he fought furiously, but Joan succeeded in knocking the bottle from his grasp. It fell upon the table. Lancaster righted it, and suddenly darted toward the desk. Joan caught him. He flung her across the room. He had got the drawer open when she grappled with him again.

He struck at her with his right hand, beating her about the wrists, but she would not let go. She would never leave go, not though he struck her in the face. He tossed her this way and that, but she never unclasped her hold. At last he dropped into his chair exhausted and covered his face with his hands.

"Twelve minutes more," said Joan triumphantly, looking at her watch.

Then she realized that all through the struggle there had been a hammering at the door. She got up. "Who is it?" she called.



"Well Done!" She Said.

"Miss Wentworth, unlock the door, please," came the frightened voice of Mrs. Fraser.

"In a few minutes," said Joan.

"Miss Wentworth, what are you doing to Doctor Lancaster?"

"I am taking care of him."

"Mr. Myers says you will kill him. He has got to have his morphine; you can't stop a man abruptly like that. Mr. Myers understands him—"

"Mr. Myers can come in in fifteen minutes," said Joan. All the while she spoke she had never taken her eyes from Lancaster's face.

Lancaster was suffering acutely. The sweat streamed down his face, and he was looking at her with the eyes of a suffering animal Yet it was not until the watch hand was on the hour, that Joan took the bottle from the desk.

"The whole bottle is a normal dose," said Lancaster, through his teeth.

Joan drew one-fourth into the syringe.

"You must give me all, Miss Wentworth. That little quantity is useless."

He was lying about the strength of the dose, and he knew that Joan knew. She did not answer him. He extended his arm, and she plunged the needle into the wrist. Then she corked the bottle and she put it into the pocket of her uniform, having previously added the small quantity in the bottle upon the table.

The hammering at the door had begun again. But the girl waited until the spasms of pain disappeared from Lancaster's face. He rose.

"Miss Wentworth!" he began gratefully. Then, catching sight of her bruised wrists, he took her hands in his.

"Did I do that?" he cried.

"Not you, Doctor Lancaster," answered Joan, snatching her wrists away. "Your enemy—our enemy, who is now worsted in his first field of battle."

"Miss Wentworth, you see now what I am. I can't hold you to your promise. You must leave me. Who's that at the door?"

"We shall see," answered Joan, and unlocked it.

Myers was standing outside, white with rage, and with him was Doctor Jenkins, looking uneasy and embarrassed; his eyes fell before Joan's.

"Tell her what you told me!" stammered Myers, beside himself with his anger.

"Miss Wentworth," faltered Jenkins, "indeed you don't understand what you are doing. Doctor Lancaster—"

"Is a mighty sick man," burst out the secretary. "And it's my job to prevent him from being killed by meddlers. He picked this nurse up somewhere and she's trying to get rid of me and have the charge of the doctor. I won't stand for it," he added to Joan. "I warned you twice today, and you paid no attention to me. Now you can pack up and leave the institute. Isn't that right, doctor?" he added, to Lancaster.

To Joan's stupefaction, Lancaster's old irresolution had already returned, and more; he seemed to ally himself with the secretary. The morphine, which had restored his body, had lent him its own false personality.

"Well, you see, Miss Wentworth means well," he said slowly, "but she doesn't realize conditions. You see," he added, turning to Joan but not meeting her eyes, "one has to taper off very slowly in a desperate case like mine. I'm very far gone, and heroic measures are useless."

"That's right. Now tell her to go," said Myers.

"Yes, Miss Wentworth, I really don't believe that you can do any good here," said Lancaster obediently. "It was a mistake. You shall be paid a full month's salary. Ask Mr. Myers to make out your check."

"She can drive back with Doctor Jenkins now," suggested Myers.

"She can drive back with Doctor Jenkins," agreed Lancaster, and Joan saw the secretary's pale face blaze with triumph.

"And you might get me a few more bottles from the storeroom," whispered Lancaster to Myers. "I'm very shaky. I must have enough on hand in case I wake up in the night. You understand my needs, Myers," he continued, with a catch of self-pity in his voice.

Joan did not hesitate a moment. She slipped between the two men and ran to the storeroom. With a muttered oath Myers ran after her. The girl was just in time to slam the door in his face and lean against it inside, bracing her foot against a plank and using the whole weight of her body.

She heard Myers breathe heavily as he tried to force his entrance. He dashed himself madly against it, but Joan knew that she would die rather than yield.

"Open that door!" shrieked Myers, in uncontrolled fury. "Open at once, do you hear me?"

Joan looked hastily about her. Some instinct seemed to tell her that the case of morphine bottles was hidden under the linen pile in the near corner. By stretching out one hand without giving way in the least Joan could just reach far enough to toss away the napkins. There were dozens of the tiny bottles in the packing case beneath—enough to kill a herd of oxen.

Joan heard Jenkins' protesting voice outside, and the irresolute tones of Lancaster. The matron was speaking, too. The girl did not know what they were saying to Myers, beyond the general sense of their expostulations, but she felt her will ride high above the storm of conflict.

A hammer lay on the shelf. Joan took it in her hand.

"Listen!" she cried to those outside. "I have the morphine and I have the hammer. And I am going to break every bottle in this room—"

Lancaster cried out pitifully at her words. "Miss Wentworth, you will kill me if you do!"

"Unless this case passes into my possession. I am going to have the storeroom key, and I am going to take charge of Doctor Lancaster, who has employed me for that especial purpose, during this month."

The silence of stupefaction outside was complete. Joan flung the door open boldly and stood before the group, the hammer in her hand. She saw Lancaster, with eyes bent inquiringly upon hers, the matron and Jenkins, mute, and Myers, leaning against the opposite wall of the passage, regarding her with venomous impotence.

"Well, what do you say to that, doctor?" he sneered.

Joan is putting up a good fight against big odds. Is Doctor Lancaster worth saving?

Baby Tortured Day and Night by Eczema

Resinol Stopped Itching and Healed Sick Skin

Brooklyn, N. Y., May 10:—"I thought it might interest you to know how much Resinol has done for my baby. Her face was covered with scabs and the itching was so severe I had to keep stockings on her hands to keep her from scratching. I had to be up at night as it bothered her so she could not sleep. Two doctors, one of them a skin specialist, told me she had eczema. I tried several remedies, but nothing helped, so when I read in the paper about Resinol, I thought I would give it a trial. I can't praise it enough, for it has done wonders for the baby's skin and she sleeps all through the night now. I would advise anyone with a similar case to try Resinol Ointment." LEADS WHITE PLAGUE FIGHT

"Father of the anti-tuberculosis movement in Minnesota."

This is the title given Dr. H. Longstreet Taylor of St. Paul, now president of the Minnesota Public Health Association, pioneer tuberculosis worker and leader in the state sanatorium campaign, who for over 30 years has taken an active part in the state and national fight against the White Plague.

Way back in 1893 when it was believed generally that tuberculosis was a hopeless malady, and there was no effort being made to combat it, Dr. Taylor started a campaign for the erection of a state sanatorium in Minnesota. This was five years before the opening of the first sanatorium in the country at Rutland, Mass. Years of education and propaganda were needed to impress people with the necessity for the institution, and it was not until fourteen years later that the state sanatorium at Walker was opened. Dr. Taylor each year has been one of the most enthusiastic volunteer workers in the Christmas Seal sale, which makes possible the far-reaching health program.

"Without the educational campaign, which the little Christmas Seals support, Minnesota could not have made its remarkable progress against the White Plague," said Dr. Taylor. "It is a far cry from the days when a diagnosis of tuberculosis was considered a death warrant to the present time with hundreds of patients recovering their health in Minnesota's sanatoria each year. The death rate from this disease has been cut more than one-third since the campaign started. We must not, however, be lulled to rest by this splendid progress. The fight against tuberculosis is well begun, but it is not yet finished, and the campaign must be continued aggressively in order to hold the ground we have gained and to make further progress."

"Every Christmas Seal bought helps bring nearer the day when tuberculosis will be completely controlled in Minnesota."

WORTH SAVING?

Rescued just in time these youngsters, who were threatened with tuberculosis, are now winning health at Glen Lake sanatorium near Hopkins, where all winter long they go about scantily clad in order that the sun and air may get in their healing work.

Throughout Minnesota and right here in this county are many children over whom hangs the shadow of tuberculosis. Many of them will break with the disease, unless preventive treatment is started early. To make possible Free Clinics to discover these children, and a general health program to teach all boys and girls how to build strong bodies to resist the disease, funds are now being raised through the sale of Christmas Seals.

"It costs six times as much to cure a tuberculosis patient as it does to educate him to avoid it" is the statement of the Minnesota Public Health Association in placing special stress on prevention, which is the chief weapon in the war on tuberculosis financed by Christmas Seals.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage containing a Power of Sale, by reason of which default said Power of Sale has become operative, and the Assignee of the Mortgagee hereinafter named is authorized to declare the whole sum due, and it hereby does declare said sum due, which mortgage was executed by Jacob Brun and Christine Brun, his wife, Mortgagors, to Deposit Trust & Savings Bank, Winona, Minnesota, a corporation under the laws of the State of Minnesota, Mortgagee, dated November 8th, 1920 and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 12th day of November, A. D. 1920, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 103 of Mortgages, on page 30;

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Deposit Trust & Savings Bank, Winona, Minnesota, Mortgagee, to Deposit Bank & Trust Company, by written assignment, dated July 31st, 1924, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 3rd day of December, A. D. 1924 at 11 o'clock A. M., in Book 110 of Mortgages, on page 335,

And whereas, the said Deposit Bank & Trust Company, the assignee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms of said mortgage and the Power of Sale therein contained; and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due on said mortgage, at the date of this notice, the sum of Four Thousand Dollars ($4000.00), with accumulated interest from the 8th day of November 1920 at the rate of six and one-half per cent per annum; and whereas, the said Power of Sale has become operative and no action or proceedings having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof,

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz:

The East Half of the Southwest Quarter (E½SW¼) and Lots Three and Four of Section Eighteen (18), in Township One Hundred Fifty-five (155) North, of Range Forty-three (43) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota,

Which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the front door of the County Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 27th day of January 1925, at 10 o'clock A. M., of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the amount then due on said mortgage and interest, together with the costs and disbursements of such sale and Seventy-five Dollars attorneys fees stipulated as attorneys fees in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

Washington — Eleven years after an indictment was returned against him, charging defalcation of more than $30,000 in bank funds, George W. Hunter, former cashier of a Williamstown, W. Va., bank, was arrested here.

Washington — Without committing himself to any definite program, President Coolidge indicated to a delegation representing the Washington Chamber of Commerce that he would sanction inaugural ceremonies commensurate with the dignity of the office into which he will be inducted next March 4.

Domestic

Springfield, Mass.—Two members of the On Leong tong were shot and seriously wounded in the first outbreak of the tong war in this city.

New York—Bishop W. F. McDowell was re-elected president of the board of education of the Methodist Episcopal church at its fifty-ninth annual meeting.

Los Angeles—Funeral services for Gene Stratton Porter, novelist, totally injured here in a collision between her automobile and a streetcar were held in Los Angeles.

New York — Mme. Roger Sundreau, daughter of the late Jacques Lebaudy, "Emperor of the Sahara," sailed for home on the steamer Paris, after an unsuccessful attempt to avoid recognition.

Tuscaloosa, Ala. — When a gasoline launch went over the dam at Lock 4 on the Tombigbee river near here, Jesse Kirkland was drowned and Captain B. C. Kirkland and another man were badly injured.

New York—Ear trouble has compelled Mme. Johanna Gadski, opera star, to cancel the remainder of her season on a vaudeville circuit, it has been learned here. She had a contract at a salary ranging from $3,500 to $4,000 a week.

Scranton, Pa.—Hope that the 12,000 striking miners of the Pittson district would return to work soon faded when the general grievance committee again voted to reject any and all peace proposals submitted to them by Rinaldo Cappellini, district president.

Indianapolis—Three well known women and Postmaster General Harry S. New have accepted membership on the honorary committee for the American Legion's $5,000,000 endowment, it was announced at national headquarters of the legion here.

Chicago — The funeral cortege of a bootblack will be headed by a brass band and pass through Chicago's financial district if the last request of Mike, who for 44 years has shined the shoes of brokers and bankers, is carried out.

Peoria, Ill.—John A. Lutz, 86 years old, pioneer Logan county merchant and friend of Abraham Lincoln, is dead at Lincoln, Ill. He was born in 1839 in Germany and came to this country when a small boy.

Binghamton, N. Y.—After eluding the police for 11 years, Wallace H. Schrader, 53 years old, was being held for the authorities of Everett, Wash. Schrader is said to have been tried and convicted of second degree murder for the killing in 1913 of his wife.

New York—The airplane was described as the ambulance of the future by Colonel Robert Picque of the army health department in France. Colonel Picque and Colonel J. Uzac, both leaders in the movement for aerial hospitalization, are here on a visit as delegates to the annual meeting of the Military Surgeons Association.

New York—Authenticity of a bust of George Washington believed to have been a sculpture of David D'Angers, which recently was sold here for about $10,000 after being found in a junk yard, is questioned as a result of an investigation by United States Attorney General H. F. Stone, revealed.

Chicago—An appropriation of $400,000 to purchase lands in the Mississippi river bottoms between Rock Island, Ill., and Lake Pepin, Minn., authorized by the last congress in denoting this 300 mile strip of river lands as the Upper Mississippi River Wild Life and Fish Refuge, was included in President Coolidge's budget message.

New York—Bismarck, a dog, gave an alarm of fire by violent barking and 25 tenants of a west side apartment house made their way to safety from flames which partly destroyed the lower floors of the building.

Rochester, N. Y.—Bringing his total known benefactions to $58,602,900, George Eastman, head of the Eastman Kodak Company, announced new gifts of $12,500,000 to institutions of higher education, after recently announcing a gift of $2,500,000 in the Greater University of Rochester campaign. Those to benefit under the latest gifts are

Sports

New York—Ty Cobb will play one more season after which he will cease to be an active athlete and devote his time to directing the Tigers from the bench.

Chicago — Eddie Collins, second baseman of the Chicago American league club, has been appointed manager of the White Sox for the 1925 season, succeeding Johnny Evers, according to word received from Charles Comiskey, president of the Sox.

New York—Tommy Gibbons, of St. Paul, pride of the Middle West and leading contender for Jack Dempsey's crown, battered Kid Norfolk, of Baltimore, rugged Negro light heavyweight champion into submission in Madison Square Garden. Gibbons scored a technical knockout over his dusky opponent when the referee stopped the fight in the sixth round of their 15-round match to save Norfolk further punishment.

New York — Two important deals, in both of which the world's champion Washington Senators figured, emerged from a maze of negotiations marking the final gathering of baseball clans here. The Senators obtained Stanley Coveleskie, veteran Cleveland pitcher, and strengthened their infield reserve forces by getting Mike McNally, utility man traded to Boston by the New York Yankees for Howard Shanks. Washington gave J. T. Prothro, in exchange for McNally, while Cleveland gets Byron Speece, submarine ball pitcher.

Foreign

Reval—Premier Akel tendered his resignation owing to ill health and M. Jaakson, former minister of justice, was invited to form a new cabinet.

Paris — French newspapers sought to have the government refuse American motion picture companies permission to make films with historical buildings as backgrounds.

Belgrade—A revolution has broken in Albania, according to refugees who have reached Jugoslavia. The Albania premier, Fan S. Noli, is reported to have fled and panic reigns at Tirana.

Berlin — The Frankfort police have issued a warrant for the arrest of Count Guenther Bernstorff, son of the German war ambassador to the United States, on a charge of usury. The count opened his own bank during the inflation days.

The Hague — The government in parliament tabled a bill which would have approved the liquor treaty concluded at Washington, Aug. 22, between the United States and the Netherlands. The treaty is identical with the Anglo-American treaty.

Tokio — Although it is generally understood in well informed circles that Tsuneo Matcudaira, vice-minister of foreign affairs, has been selected for the post of ambassador to Washington, in succession to Masanao Hanihara, the formal announcement is withheld pending ratification of the cabinet.

Lyons, France — Five wedding guests were killed outright and another died from his injuries when a motorcar driven from the church in Brignais after the ceremony, failed to take a corner and crashed through a store front. Five other persons, including the bride and groom, were seriously injured.

Peking —Tuan Chi Jui, head of the Chinese provisional government, has succeeded in eliminating the Christian general, Feng Yu Hsiang, as a military factor by inducing General Feng to issue a promunciamento abolishing the citizens army thereby yielding control of his troops. Tuan is now expected to authorize Feng's retirement.

Rome—The impeachment of General Debono, former director of the general police and also commander of the black shirt militia, in connection with the murder of the socialist deputy Matteotti, was formally demanded by the parliamentary opposition in the senate. "I have done everything possible to arrest the slayers and I know nothing about the crime," said General Debono in denying the charges.

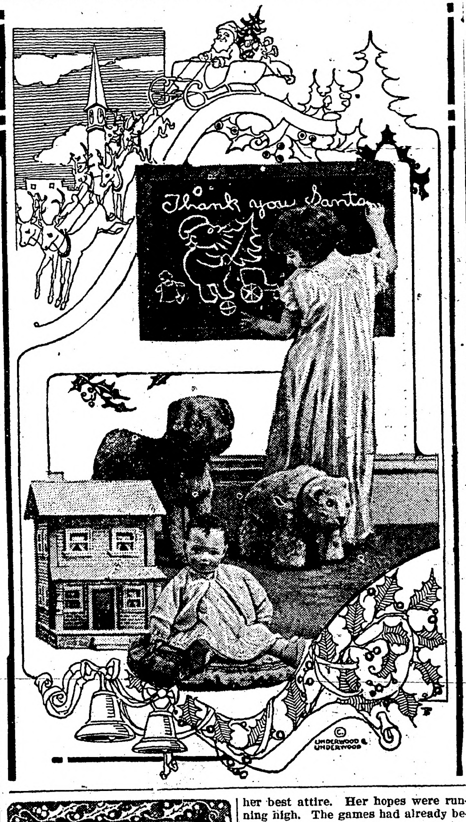
Cairo—Students of the training college here, in protest against the transfer of the Egyptian headmaster by the under secretary of education, carried out a demonstration by hooting the English professors and refusing to answer questions. The under secretary dismissed 50 of the students when it was intimated that the English professors would resign unless the ringleaders were arrested and an apology made.

Canton, China—Three of the Canton Christian College students captured by bandits have returned to the college on parole, bringing a demand for ransom for the others, still held prisoners. Forty-eight teachers and students of the college were seized by bandits while going from Canton to the college in a launch flying the American flag. General Li Fuh Lin, who is conducting the search for the kidnapers, has warned the elders of four villages that he will destroy their towns unless the captives are freed.

Paris—It is announced here by the Spanish embassy that Quiones Dileon, Spanish ambassador to France, will sign the Geneva peace protocol in Rome at the League of Nations meeting. This will bring the number of signatories of the protocol to 16.

Managua, Nicaragua—General Julio Peralta, with 500 troops, is near the frontier preparing for a new invasion of Honduras and Nicaragua, according to reports received here. It is asserted that Peralta intends to join General Ferrera, the revolutionary chief, in another attempt to overthrow President Tosta.

Santa Claus Was Here



THE Christmas Party

By Eleanor King

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

THE odor of soup prevailed throughout the two rooms which constituted the home of Mrs. Pourrez, and her three children, namely Raoul, the eldest, Henrietta, the middle, and Louise the youngest.

"Tonight," mused Mrs. Pourrez, "is the anniversary of our coming to Amerique. Three years have passed, and we still have not found Andre. I have tried every way to locate him. The lady at the settlement house told me to be sure and come to the Christmas party because many people come to that who never come throughout the year. She said I might meet him."

"Oui, ma mere, do go," said Raoul, "I do wish we could find father. We would have the happiest Christmas we could imagine."

Mrs. Pourrez' work kept her quite late in the evening. Her tasks were heavy. She was endeavoring to send her three children to school and support their little home.

"Mere," said Raoul, "we shall put our candle in the window to welcome you when you return, and please may we sit up to see whether our father returns with you by chance?"

"Si vous voulez," said his mother, lapsing back into her native tongue.

"If we wish? Of course we do," chorused the children.

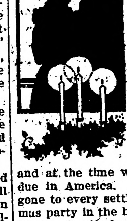
Mrs. Pourrez's husband, Andre, had left his wife and family to come to America to try and better himself. He left with a promise to find a cozy home and to save money for their passage. Three and a half years ago word had come that, by saving and good, hard work, the house had been secured and awaited their arrival. But no Mr. Pourrez was there to meet them, as planned, on their arrival into this country. The poor mother, broken-hearted, had had to start out and earn a living to keep her family. And so each Christmas, the anniversary of their arrival, she looked to meet her husband.

Now she hurriedly made her way toward the settlement house, arrayed in her best attire. Her hopes were running high. The games had already begun. The settlement house was a babel of voices. The faces in that rather mixed crowd were all beaming with delight as they forgot their many worries in the games they were playing. But one face in that picture lost its gayety as the crowd was carefully scanned. She saw no Andre. Her hopes were shattered.

The games continued. Finally some one proposed that the different nationalities get together in groups and give one of their respective country's dances. The Italians started the fun, the French were to be next. The dance to be given was decided upon and the music commenced. A door opened at the back of the hall. A man appeared. A settlement house worker ushered him in, saying:

"You are just in time to join the French dance, Mr. —"

A woman came bounding forth. "Andre!" she cried, and she was lost in the two huge arms which encircled her.



"Where have you been?" was all the poor woman could gasp in her joy.

Christmas morning found the Pourrez family reunited in their new home. Around the table the family was gathered, gazing at Andre Pourrez. He was telling how illness had kept him lying delirious in a hospital for months and at the time when their boat was due in America. Every year he had gone to every settlement house Christmas party in the hope of finding them. That was why he had been so late in arriving last evening. It was the last party on his list to visit. And now, how happy they all were.

New Ulm—The practice of excavating in streets and alleys of New Ulm and hauling away gravel has reached such a stage that the city council has decided to call a halt.

Appleton—Village officials in Appleton hereafter will be selected under the Australian ballot system as a result of the adoption of an ordinance by the village council.

Duluth—Merger of motor bus companies in Duluth and Iron Range territory is believed to have given Minnesota the largest company of its kind in the United States.

Tracy—Because of the late maturing of the corn crop in this section, corn husking is reported to be far behind. It is reported that there is still a large acreage of corn in the fields.

Stillwater—With 75 years of continuous service behind it, the First Presbyterian church of Stillwater, celebrated its diamond jubilee, historical services marking the celebration.

Duluth—Possible sites in Duluth for the proposed $2,000,000 tuberculosis hospital of the United States Veterans' bureau were inspected by a special commission named recently by Director General Hines of the bureau.

Hibbing—John Morrison, editor and publisher of a Duluth weekly paper, convicted of slander, was sentenced by Judge Thomas Brady to serve a term of 90 days in the county work farm. He was released on $500 bail.

Cottonwood—The new co-operative creamery here will begin operations this week. L. C. Larson will operate the institution and the cream from 1,400 cows in this section has been pledged the new creamery at the outset.

Duluth—Otto Nustrum, Duluth fisherman, was saved from almost certain death in the heavy surf in front of the United States coast guard station in one of the most spectacular rescues ever made by the local coast guard crew.

Fisher—Thieves entered the Chris Weidenhoffer jewelry store here and stole 200 rings, and several fountain pens and numerous other articles. Leaving the store, the thieves broke into the A. C. Merril garage and took an automobile in which they escaped.

St. Paul—The Minnesota Potato Growers Exchange will handle 9,000,000 bushels of potatoes from the 1924 crop. This is in excess of 3,000,000 bushels which have been turned back to the farms in the sorting and grading process to which the exchange local warehouses subject each bushel.

Hibbing—Re-organization of the Range Shrine club was perfected at a meeting of the Shriners from all parts of the Range. Dr. Hugh McKecknie of Hibbing was named president; William Spensey of Hibbing was named secretary, and Arthur Egge of Hibbing treasurer.

St. Paul—The reopening of two banks, one in New Ulm, the other in Searles was announced Saturday. The Farmers and Merchants' State bank of New Ulm, reopened with a capital of $50,000, and deposits of $351,000. The Searles State bank will open its doors with a capital of $10,000.

Virginia—Probably the costliest skating rink in Minnesota will be in Virginia this winter. The city council has decided that the new $250,000 recreational building shall be used as an inclosed rink the next few months. To protect the floor, tar paper, felt and sawdust will be placed over it before the water is turned on.

Duluth—As the ship's bell rang out eight strikes at midnight the increased insurance rates expired and vessels leaving port on the Great Lakes after that hour carried their own insurance. With the exception of a few venturesome skippers and owners, this will mark the practical end of navigation on the Great Lakes until next spring.

Thief River Falls—Alfalfa, king of feeds for dairy cattle and looked upon as the savior of this agricultural section which suffered the woes of overproduction of wheat, was honored in regal style here. The occasion was the annual celebration staged by bankers of Pennington county to interest farmers in increasing their production of this commodity.

Pet Crow Nearly Talks

Mrs. Mildred A. Glidden of Wendell, Mass., who captured a wild crow early last spring, has so tamed and trained it that it nearly talks, and in fact is given credit with saying hullo in a way that can be understood by humans. The crow is mischievous and plays wildly with brightly colored things. He runs loose and sleeps at will in the trees, on the roof of the house, or where he pleases.

Tough Grass a Nuisance

In the Philippines there is a grass, known as "cogon," which grows as high as a man's head and has roots so tough that no ordinary animals can drag a plow through it. It has been the ruin of thousands of farmers who by the use of fertilizers and other methods have tried to keep the same fields under cultivation for periods of years.

Cuticura for Pimply Faces.

To remove pimples and blackheads smear them with Cuticura Ointment. Wash off in five minutes with Cuticura Soap and hot water. Once clear keep your skin clear by using them for daily toilet purposes. Don't fail to include Cuticura Talcum. Advertisement.

Forest Fires Costly

The National Lumber Manufacturers' association has estimated that forest fire losses this season in California, Oregon, Washington, Montana and Idaho amount to $4,250,000. Of this $3,000,000 represented the loss of standing timber in the national parks and forests, $500,000 damage to privately owned standing timber and an equal sum for logs and logging equipment; $250,000 in losses to settlers and community property.

Sicilian Lemons

The fruit quarantine maintained by the United States in an effort to keep the Mediterranean fruit fly out of this country has reacted severely upon the Sicilian lemon industry. The exports from Palermo to the United States for the first quarter of 1924 were one-half million dollars less than for the corresponding quarter of 1923.

Burning Skin Diseases

quickly relieved and healed by Cole's Carbolisalve. Leaves no scars. No medicine chest complete without it. 30c and 60c at druggists, or J. W. Cole Co., Rockford, Ill.—Advertisement.

Gold Railway Bed

Passengers on a railroad east of Denver are to ride on a roadbed of gold. The right of way for 400 miles will be ballasted with the slag from the gold and silver mines of Colorado. Each ton of this slag contains at least $2 worth of gold ore, but the amount is too small for the smelting companies to get out profitably with the machinery now in use.

With a Purpose

The little boy who had received his first jilting was eating far too many sweets.

"Why can't you be contented with a few, like other boys?" asked his mother.

"Mummy," he answered, "daddy told me that a man who smokes too much gets smoker's heart, and a man who rows too much gets rower's heart, and —well—I'm eating sweets too much."

Statesmen's Fate Similar

James G. Blaine and Henry Clay suffered similar fates when they sought to be elected by their respective parties to the Presidency of the United States. Both were twice defeated for the nomination by their party during years when the party nominees were elected and both similarly were defeated when they were chosen as standard bearers.

She's Right

HEALS RUNNING SORES

"I feel it my duty to write you a letter of thanks for your wonderful Peterson's Ointment. I had a running sore on my left leg for one year. I began to use Peterson's Ointment three weeks ago and now it is healed"—A. C. Gilbrath, 703 Reed St., Erie, Pa.

For years I have been selling through druggists a large box of PETERSON'S OINTMENT for 35 cents. The healing power in this ointment is marvelous. Eczema goes in a few days. Old sores heal up like magic; piles that other remedies do not seem to even relieve are speedily conquered. Pimples and nasty blackheads disappear in a week and the distress of chafing goes in a few minutes. Mail orders filled. Peterson Ointment Co., Inc., Buffalo, N. Y.

"WHO'S THERE?"

SYNOPSIS. — Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr. John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Joan Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance. She is upset, through no fault of her own, and makes a trivial blunder at a critical moment. The patient dies and Doctor Lancaster accuses her of clumsiness. She is suspended, the action meaning the end of her hope of a career as a nurse. Without relatives or friends, and desperate, Joan, urged by her landlady, goes to Doctor Lancaster's office to ask him to overlook her blunder and reinstate her. She overhears a violent altercation between Doctor Lancaster and other men she does not see. Joan is struck by the favorable change in the appearance and demeanor of the doctor, recalling that at times in the hospital he has been gentle and thoughtful and at others supercilious and bullying. He tells her he can do nothing for her at the hospital, but offers her a position in a nursing institution in the country, telling her she can be of "great assistance" to him. A man named Myers demands she tell him what the doctor had said to her. She denies him the information, and he covertly threatens her. At the institution, which is owned by Doctor Lancaster, Joan finds Myers. He tells her he is the secretary. She instinctively dislikes and fears him. The only patient at the institute is a Mrs. Dana, demented but harmless. Joan is vaguely uneasy, feeling that there is some mystery about the place. Doctor Lancaster arrives. Joan accuses him of deceiving her, declaring her intention of leaving. He tells her he is the patient who needs her, saying he wants help in a "big fight," but makes no further explanation. She decides to stay. Evidently Doctor Lancaster is afraid of Myers. Joan discovers that the doctor is a victim of the morphine habit. Joan takes charge of him, helping him to overcome temporarily his craving for the drug. Myers accuses her of "meddling," but she refuses to leave or to give up her care of Lancaster. Mrs. Fraser, the matron, admits all at the institution are afraid of Myers, but will not say why. She begs Joan to "save the doctor." Joan in a measure succeeds in freeing Lancaster from his craving for drugs.

—10—

"It is not what Doctor Lancaster says," answered Joan. "It is what I say. Mrs. Fraser, please give me the storeroom key."

The woman, looking askance at Myers, let her hand slip down toward the bunch at her side.

"The key, please," repeated Joan, and received it. Quickly she locked the door and put the key in the pocket of her uniform.

"Now," she said, "I want you all to understand this situation. I am employed by Doctor Lancaster. I am under orders not to go until the month is ended. I am in charge of him. Until he is responsible for his actions I shall remain in charge, under Doctor Jenkins. Doctor Jenkins, is it your order that Doctor Lancaster is to receive a whole dose of morphine every few hours, of the amount he has been taking?"

"Why, Miss Wentworth, I never ordered that," protested Jenkins. "You see, Miss Wentworth—"

"Until you do," interposed Joan bluntly, "I shall continue the treatment as I learned it in Doctor Lancaster's hospital at Avonmouth. And if the storeroom is opened by anyone but myself I shall take legal action to protect Doctor Lancaster's interests."

"Miss Wentworth!" cried Myers, "you are making a tragedy where none exists. Nobody wants to harm the doctor. We all have one [illegible] thought, to help him. Don't we, doctor?" he continued, addressing Lancaster.

"You are all—very kind to me," Lancaster mumbled.

"There, you see!" said Myers, turning toward Joan again. "There may exist differences of opinion," he continued in a facile manner, "and maybe I've expressed myself too forcibly. But we're all at one in wishing the doctor to get well as quickly as he can."

He was almost fawning now, but Joan remained inflexible. She knew that if she relaxed from the nervous tension that was upholding her she would become hysterical.

The group dispersed. Myers followed the girl out upon the veranda and stood for a long time near the door, watching her as she sat at the farther end, trying to compose herself. At last he came up to her.

"See here, Miss Wentworth," he began impetuously; "I've come to you twice and spoken fairly to you. Maybe you see now that you would have been wiser to have met me in the same spirit. Come, now, are we to work together as friends or not?"

"I have no objection," answered Joan, "but my duty concerns nobody but the doctor."

"You mean you won't co-operate with me in saving him from himself?" He looked at her with sullen challenge in his eyes.

"I do," said Joan.

Myers thrust his hands into his pockets. "Right!" he said. "Three times is enough. I understand. And that's the last you'll hear from me about it."

He went away, and Joan sat staring out across the darkening hills. How had she managed to fight this blind battle of hers to a successful issue? She did not know; but, whatever the hold might be that Myers had over Lancaster, she felt that Myers himself was in dread of its discovery.

Presently she saw the matron come cautiously out of the house and hurry toward her.

"How did you do it, Miss Wentworth?" she asked in awe. "You did what none of us would have dared to do—not me, nor Doctor Jenkins."

"Why not?" asked Joan. "Mrs. Fraser, of whom are you afraid? And Doctor Lancaster? It is not of that man Myers, whom he could send about his business at any time when he found strength of will. Who is it?"

"O, Miss Wentworth, I don't know," the matron sobbed. "But save the doctor! O, do save the doctor from that man who is trying to kill him!"

Chapter VII

Joan had had supper with Lancaster, and it was night, and once more the fight was raging.

She had sat on the veranda with him, had talked with him, had seen the better soul of the man rise to the surface as he struggled with the morphine devil; then she had given him his half dose again, and, as his strength revived and the agony departed, she had seen the facile, lying spirit enter into him.

He was lying, wrapped in his dressing gown, upon his bed, and she sat at his side, at grips with the devil in him that clamored for its victim's body, that it might possess it entirely, as surely a devil as any spirit of evil, though its shrine was a little glass bottle holding a few drops of fluid.

She was fighting for Lancaster, fighting for the better Lancaster again, and he was writhing in torment and pleading with her to go, to leave him to his fate, since the suffering was intolerable and subjection preferable.

There was an hour of hideous battle, but somehow she managed to keep him quiet till midnight. And, seated beside him, watching him, Joan came to the conclusion that this was one of those strange cases of double personality of which she had read in medical books. It was impossible to reconcile this Lancaster in any way with the man whom she had seen momentarily at the hospital, and with the tyrant of the operating room. For that man was essentially base and ignoble, and this man was honor and truth, when the morphine fiend retired, baffled for a space, and under that pitiful load of shame she sensed the cleanness of the man's soul and its integrity.

"How Did You Do It, Miss Wentworth?" She Asked in Awe.

Somehow she held his devil at bay until midnight, and then, with a second victory to his credit, he stretched out his arm for the hypodermic. Then Joan saw the look of contentment come into his face, heard the satisfied sigh—and there was the old Lancaster before her, shifty, furtive and false.

No, not altogether, for something of that victory remained with him, the promise of renewed manhood; the morphine devil was losing its grip. Ground had been won. It should never be ceded. Joan swore that as she watched by the bedside.

"Doctor Lancaster, you have promised me to sleep till six," she said. "Can I trust you?"

"How can you doubt my word, Miss Wentworth?" asked Lancaster, with an affectation of surprise. "Of course you can. You know, I am not a regular user of drugs. I have been overworked, and I took morphine to make me sleep, and somehow it got hold of me. I think I must be unusually susceptible to the drug."

The old lie of the stupid drug devil! But Joan had the storeroom key, and she knew that it would require a hammer or ax to break down the strong door. And she would wake and hear him, and fight again as she had fought that morning.

"Then I am going to bed till six," she said.

"But, Miss Wentworth," he protested, "six hours is an impossibly long period. Every three hours is my time and now that I am on half-doses—you remember what Jenkins said this morning. You must go slowly with a confirmed drug-user like myself."

"Stop! Don't listen to me!" he added suddenly. "You can trust me, Miss Wentworth. I'm going to fight this out, and win."

"You are winning," answered Joan bending over him. "Don't forget that. Say 'I am winning' whenever the pain seems uncontrollable and your will seems gone. It won't last long. Doctor Lancaster, you are your own self at this moment, and nothing can harm you. Fight the good fight!"

He caught her hand and carried it to his lips. "Miss Wentworth, you are my good angel!" he cried. "I secured the services of an angel unawares," he added, looking at her with that pathetic humor which went straight to her heart. "I want to win for your sake. But why are you taking so much trouble for a worthless old fellow like me?"

"Don't flatter yourself that it is all for you, Doctor Lancaster. Perhaps I may want to save the most distinguished surgeon in the South."

At her words he started; he stared at her, and then fell back upon the pillow, hiding his face. Joan turned away. Again she had touched some hidden spring of memory; what it was she could not know, but it was evident that she had wounded him to the quick.

Perhaps it was the contrast between the office he held and the man he had become. Perhaps it was the knowledge of his secret bondage which had broken him down at last and driven him back to the Institute, and Myers.

"Miss Wentworth, I want you to lock my door and take away the key," he said. "I may have a secret supply somewhere."

"I don't think you have," answered Joan. "You have none in this room, have you?"

"No."

"I believe that. And, anyway, I am going to trust you. That is part of your fight. I am going to trust you till six."

He said good night in a low tone and turned away. Joan went up to her room. She lay down, but did not undress. She was afraid, and she admitted that she was afraid, and nothing but Lancaster's desperate need of her would have kept her an hour longer in the Institute. But she was exhausted from the day, and soon she was asleep.

She slept that sleep which brings no recreation for the jaded body or the overwrought mind. All the while she was back with Lancaster in his room below, in spirit. She knew that, as he had said, the drug bondage was only the climax of his difficulties. What had there been that had wrecked the man? Jenkins' hint at stolen funds? Of one thing she was sure: Lancaster, sunken as he was, was incapable of dishonesty. No, she must have placed a wrong construction on Jenkins' words.

And in her sleep her brain went on puzzling over the problem. Only her body was quiescent, and it lay wearily in the bed like some chained captive.

But suddenly the urgent summons of the brain shook from it the trammels of sleep. Joan listened intently, awake upon the instant, as some wild creature of the woods that senses danger. Somebody was coming along the corridor.

The footfalls were so soft and stealthy that she might have thought she was dreaming but for the sense of imminent danger, the knowledge of some malevolent design. The steps stopped and began again, the merest touches of sound against the silence of night, the lightest patter of bare feet outside the door.

Then the door began to open.

There was no moon, and the faint starlight outside only seemed to render darker the obscurity within. Yet, through the darkness Joan knew that a hand lay on the door jamb, and that a figure watched her across the room.

She leaped from her bed "Who's there?" she called, in tones that seemed to shock the silence.

She could see nothing now, and she dared not turn aside to light her lamp. She knew that the figure was crouching somewhere She heard the softest breathing, but could not locate it in the room. She felt the atmosphere of evil that surrounded her. She started to cross the room, groping, with arms outstretched. Then she found the intruder and flung herself upon it.

Her left hand closed about a wrist supple and strong. Her right hand held another hand. They wrestled in the darkness, their bodies tense but motionless, only the hands and wrist muscles at strife. Not a sound came from their lips.

Joan thought it was a woman's hands she held. Her fingers sought the menace in the closed fists. The left hand of the intruder was empty; but in the right was a jagged piece of a broken tumbler that tinkled to the floor.

So a woman is the mystery! Now why is she so bent on revenge?

HOLD MEMORIAL FOR DEAD LEADER

Achievements Of Wilson Are Eulogized In Message At Washington.

Washington. — Woodrow Wilson sought to give the 20th century a faith to inspire it and to justify the sacrifice of millions of lives in the great war, and if there was failure it was humanity's failure. Dr. Edwin A. Alderman, president of the University of Virginia declared at joint congressional memorial services for the war president, held Monday in the chamber of the house of representatives.

"To make him the one undaunted advocate of those hopes, the scapegoat of a world collapse," Dr. Alderman said, "is to visit upon him injustice so cruel that it must perish of its own reason."

Not a Failure.

Speaking in the place where Wilson delivered the address that carried his country into the world conflict, the University of Virginia president declared he could not envisage Wilson as a failure as he came back from the Paris peace conference bearing the covenant of the League of Nations and the "imperfect" treaty of Versailles.

"I envisage him rather as a victor and conqueror as he returned to America," he said. "Untouched by sordidness or dishonor, unsurpassed in moral devotion, and offering to his country leadership in the broadest and worthiest cause in all the story of human struggle for a better life."

Dr. Alderman said it was not for him to undertake the task of apportioning with "nice justice the responsibility for the caldron of heat and 'sweltered venom' of deadlock and indecision, of partisanship and passion, in which for weary months this largest question of modern times boiled and bubbled."

"His ambition to serve his country was as intense as Cromwell's. It was not easy for him to forget or to forgive. It was the pride of righteousness sometimes which froze the genial currents of his soul but he was willing to die, and did die to guarantee to humble men a fairer chance in a juster world. And therefore, the savage assaults of his enemies will shrivel into the insignificance of Horace Greeley's editorials against Lincoln's policies, or the futility of the early century pamphleteers against Thomas Jefferson as an iconoclast and anti-Christ, and his mere detractors will themselves either attain a repellant fame as detractors of greatness or else they will pass out of memory."

CHINESE CIVIL WAR AT END

Decision of General Chi to Abandon Resistance Ends Rebellion.

Shanghai.—The end of civil war in China, after four months fighting, was virtually assured when abandonment of further resistance to the regime of Tuan Chi-Jui, by the Yangtze river provinces was made certain by arrival here of the family of Chi Shieh-Yuan, military governor of this province, and the report that General Chi is preparing to follow.

General Chi, who was one of the leaders of the forces which besieged Shanghai in September and October, has been at Nanking recently and is reported to have a special train set out on the tracks before there ready to bring him to this city

Han Kuo-Chun, the civil governor of this province, officially took over the reins of government Monday morning.

The sudden decision of General Chi to quit his resistance to the newly instituted government at Peking is declared due to the defection of virtually all of his troops, and the move is recognized as making complete cessation of fighting in all China.

IS FORMER VALLEY CITY GIRL

Bobhaired Bandit Tells Minneapolis Police Amazing Tale of Crime.

Fargo, N. D.—Mrs. Alice Carlisle, 19-year-old tam o'shanter bobhaired bandit, who confessed to Minneapolis police that she had taken part in 20 holdups in the city, was formerly Miss Alice M. Tooley of Valley City.

The girl, who was married only three weeks ago to Howard Carlisle, 23, also formerly of Valley City, wrote an amazing story of crime in her confession to the police. Her story led to the immediate arrest of her husband, another man and a girl.

How she participated in holdups, netting about $5,000, often dressed in men's clothing and carrying a revolver in her pocket, was the basis of her chronicle which she typed for the police. She declared that she had gone to high school in Minneapolis and had later graduated with honors from a business college.

Father Stabbed by Crazed Son.

Chicago.—Bruce A. Shaw, wealthy automobile parts manufacturer and inventor, died from a sword thrust in the chest delivered by George Shaw, his 26 year old son. George is a shell shocked veteran of the World war. "He is crazy, shell shocked," the dying man told the doctors. "He has been psychoneurotic since the war and has been in many sanitariums." The stabbing occurred in the Shaw home following a roadhouse party consisting of George, his sister, Miss Hazel Brady and Earl Todd, friends of the Shaws.

Trace Causes of Odors in Metals

Experiments have been made to prove that metals have odors composed not of the atoms of the metal, but of the products of their chemical changes. At ordinary temperatures the odors frequently could not be detected, or were almost imperceptible, but became more pronounced as the metal was heated, and then disappeared after the heating had been continued for a considerable length of time. The experimenters also have succeeded in isolating the odorous matter.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

And Then She Screamed

Here seems to be proof that a dream, which seems to the dreamer to continue for a considerable period, in reality lasts only a few seconds, says the Indianapolis Star.

A South side woman dreamed that a rat had bitten her on each of her feet. She walked to a physician's office in her dream, of course—and had the wounds cauterized. Then she began to awake, and it seemed the rat was frisking about her neck. She screamed and, as she thrust out her arm, a little mouse scampered off it and onto the floor.

Measure Lightning

Photography determines the distance of a lightning flash and hence the dimensions of any of its features. Two cameras are mounted side by side and exposed at the same time, says Nature Magazine. Objects of known distance from the point of observation are photographed along with the lightning, and a comparison of the two pictures, plus a little mathematics, gives the distance of the lightning much more exactly than the old process of counting seconds between the flash and the thunder.

WHAT ARE FEDERAL RESERVE NOTES?

Way in Which Currency Is Increased or Decreased According to Business Needs.

Federal reserve notes are direct obligations of the United States and are receivable by all national banks and member banks and by Federal reserve banks, and for all taxes, customs and other public dues, but they are not legal tender for private debts. These notes are redeemable in gold upon the demand of the holder at the Treasury Department of the United States in Washington, or in gold or lawful money at any Federal reserve bank.

The means by which Federal reserve notes are issued and the security behind them is of considerable interest. Any Federal reserve bank may make application to the Federal reserve agent (the local representative of the Federal Reserve Board) for such amounts as it may require, accompanying its application by a tender of collateral equal to the amount of notes applied for. This collateral consists of notes or bills acquired either by rediscount from member banks or by purchase in the open market, or gold or gold certificates.

Against its Federal reserve notes that are in active circulation a Federal reserve bank is required to hold a gold reserve of 40 per cent. But any gold deposited with the Federal reserve agent as collateral may be counted as part of this required reserve. In order to redeem its notes in gold when presented at the United States Treasury each reserve bank must carry a gold fund with the treasurer of the United States of at least 5 per cent of its outstanding notes not covered by gold collateral, but this redemption fund counts as part of the required reserve of 40 per cent.

Federal reserve notes, then, are secured as follows: (1) they are a direct promise or obligation of the United States and of the issuing Federal reserve bank; (2) they have collateral behind them of at least 100 per cent, consisting of eligible paper or gold; (3) a gold reserve of 40 per cent is required; (4) they are a first lien on the assets of the issuing Federal reserve bank.

One of the prime reasons for providing for the issuance of Federal reserve notes was to secure an elastic currency—that is, a currency that would expand and contract with the needs of business. This was accomplished by permitting the issue of these notes largely against commercial paper. For example, when member banks are being called on heavily for loans they rediscount with their Federal reserve bank some of their eligible notes. The reserve bank in turn deposits this paper with the Federal reserve agent, receiving from him a like amount of Federal reserve notes which may be turned over to member banks in return for the notes it has rediscounted, or circulated in some other way.

Contraction is practically automatic. If the needs of business diminish there is less need for currency and less borrowing at the member banks. These in turn reduce their rediscounts at their reserve banks by turning over to it funds received from the repayment of loans and from deposits. In times of declining business it is usual for the member banks to repay much of their borrowing with Federal reserve notes deposited with them by their customers.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON MAKING SAVINGS EASY

Helen met Aunt Emmy on the street. "Where are you going, Aunty? May I come, too?" she asked.

"Of course you may, dear. I'm just going to the savings bank with my weekly deposit."

"Oh, Aunty, I didn't know you saved money regularly. I wish I could."

"Anybody can who really wants to," said Aunt Emmy dryly. "It's easy enough if you have some system about it."

"But it doesn't seem at all interesting to go to the bank once a week with just so much," Helen said. "There's no fun in saving that way."

"Nonsense!" replied Aunt Emmy. "It's good fun to see your interest marked up on the book. But if you want an interesting way to save I'll tell you one. You and Maud do it together. You put away a cent for each day of the month. Suppose you begin today. This is the sixth. All right, then, you each put six cents into a little box. Tomorrow you put in seven cents and so on up to the thirty-first of the month. Then you begin again with one cent. The most you will have to put away any one day is thirty-one cents, and you know how easily that goes for candy or some other useless trash."

"Yes, but how much would we save by the end of the year, Aunty?"

"Enough to pay for a nice little vacation or to make a fine Christmas—about sixty dollars, without knowing it almost," Aunt Emmy said.

"Why, Aunty, that is a great plan. I shall tell Maud tonight," Helen said. "If we do it right along at the end of the year we shall have more than we ever had in our lives all at once."

"Exactly—but remember, the main thing is regularity—until finally saving will become a habit," Aunt Emmy said.—Anne B. Aymes.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage containing a Power of Sale, by reason of which default said Power of Sale has become operative, and the Assignee of the Mortgagee hereinafter named is authorized to declare the whole sum due, and it hereby does declare said sum due, which mortgage was executed by Jacob Brun and Christine Brun, his wife, Mortgagors, to Deposit Trust & Savings Bank, Winona, Minnesota, a corporation under the laws of the State of Minnesota, Mortgagee, dated November 8th, 1920 and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 12th day of November, A. D. 1920, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 103 of Mortgages, on page 30,

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Deposit Trust & Savings Bank, Winona, Minnesota, Mortgagee, to Deposit Bank & Trust Company, by written assignment, dated July 31st, 1924, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 3rd day of December, A. D. 1924 at 11 o'clock A. M., in Book 110 of Mortgages, on page 335,

And whereas, the said Deposit Bank & Trust Company, the asignee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms of said mortgage and the Power of Sale therein contained; and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due on said mortgage, at the date of this notice, the sum of Four Thousand Dollars ($4000.00), with accumulated interest from the 8th day of November 1920 at the rate of six and one-half per cent per annum; and whereas, the said Power of Sale has become operative and no action or proceedings having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof,

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz:

The East Half of the Southwest Quarter (E½SW¼) and Lots Three and Four of Section Eighteen (18), in Township One Hundred Fifty-five (155) North, of Range Forty-three (43) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota.

Which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the front door of the County Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 27th day of January 1925, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the amount then due on said mortgage and interest, together with the costs and disbursements of such sale and Seventy-five Dollars attorneys fees stipulated as attorneys fees in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

Dated December 8th, 1924.

Its now time for those New Year resolutions.

We wish all our readers a Prosperous and Happy New Year.

Iver Omoth left Monday to spend the holidays with relatives at Spring Grove.

The skating rink has been flooded and is now ready for this fine winter sport.

Albert Hagglund returned home Tuesday from visiting relatives in Washington and California.

Miss Esther Hagberg went to Crookston Tuesday to spend Christmas with her sister, Mrs. Jesse Sorum.

Arthur Smith came home Friday from Waukegan, Ill. to spend the holidays with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Smith.

Misses Olava and Myrtle Sollom came Saturday for the Christmas vacation. Miss Myrtle will have two months vacation.

Miss Maude Forsythe of Dugdale came Friday to keep house for her sister, Mrs. G. Sanoden, while the latter was at the hospital.

H. A. Matthees left Saturday afternoon for Goodhue, Minn. to visit his mother, Mrs. H. P. Matthees who is ill. He expects to be gone about ten days.

A large crowd attended the splendid program given by the Holt school Friday night. The teachers and pupils have gone to their homes to spend a well earned vacation.

O. C. Johnson has had a radio receiving set installed in his home and is just one more "radio bug" added to the many "bugs" already in existence in this community.

Corporal Clifford Flak of U. S. army, stationed at Ft. Snelling, who has a months furlough, came Saturday for a visit at the home of his sister, Mrs. Selmer Reierson and family.

Guy Anderson commenced using his snowmobile on Monday. He has fixed up a covered rig so that he will be able to take good care of all the mail and packages on his rural route, and we are sure he will find it convenient for the winter months.

Mrs. G. Sanoden was taken sick with appendicitis one day last week and on Saturday Mr. Sanoden took her to the hospital in Crookston, where she was operated upon Monday morning. He returned home Tuesday and reports that she is doing as well as could be expected.

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Young, The Editors, were hosts to a chicken dinner given to the late Daddies of Holt. Those attending the dinner were Rev. Dixon and Mr. McKnight of Thief River Falls, P. L. Anderson, S. E. Reierson, O. C. Johnson, R. A. Holmgren and Robert J. Lund.

A toast to the New Babies was given by Rev. Dixon and a response was made by Robert J. Lund. During the dinner, Rev. Dixon gave a very vivid account of conditions in Ireland, his native country. The evening was well spent and we can vouch for the ability of Mr. and Mrs. Young to provide for the wants of the body as well as for the mind.

REPORT PEACE TREATY BROKEN

Alleged Arms Violation May Halt Evacuation Of German City

Paris.—The chances of the Cologne area being evacuated by the Allies, January 10, under the provisions of the Treaty of Versailles have been diminished, it is thought in French official circles, by the regular semi-monthly report of the Allied military control mission in Germany.

This report, which now is in the hands of the Allied war committee, is understood to confirm the special reports in their charge that Germany was persisting in arming, contrary to the peace treaty provisions.

Arms Violations Reported.

The pressure being brought to bear by the German government through Ambassador Von Hoesch will be unavailing, it is thought here, in the face of the reported positive violations of Germany's agreements to disarm. The ambassador declared to the political director of the foreign office that if the Allies persisted in their intention of remaining in the Cologne area, as forecast, they would be depended upon to carry out the Dawes plan.

The political director, M. Laroche, is understood to have replied that if the intention of Germany to make its agreement good under the Dawes plan was so frail as to risk breaking under the simple exercise by the Allies of the undoubted right conferred by the Treaty of Vesailles to insist on the fulfillment of the disarmament clauses of that treaty, then any concessions the Allies might make would risk encountering a similar reaction in the future.

M. Laroche added that the evacuation question was an Allied one, in which all the Allies must have a voice and that it could be decided only after consultation.

WILL CHECK FOWL EPIDEMIC

Federal Campaign to Halt Poultry Disease Started.

Washington.—The campaign against the European fowl plague and other poultry diseases, which have disorganized the trade in some sections of the country, was put under Monday by the department of agriculture.

Congress, having voted Saturday to appropriate $100,000 for the fight, the bureau of animal industry which has the work in charge, ordered federal inspectors to conduct a survey to determine the infected areas. These will be quarantined and all poultry, chicken coops and railroad cars will be denied interstate transportation until disinfected and certified by inspectors.

Inspection of poultry in New York, New Jersey, Philadelphia, Chicago, and several midwestern points has been reported. The bureau planned to request railroads to delay movement of poultry shipments until they can be examined by federal officers.

The European fowl plague which has appeared in this country for the first time is described as extremely infectious and of high mortality. Conspicuous symptoms are depression and loss of appetite followed by prostration. The comb and wattles become purple and breathing is labored. Treatment of the disease is futile, it is said, and the bureau has urged poultry raisers to use every precaution to prevent its spread. Destruction of fowls showing symptoms is advised.

MAIL PILOT DIES IN STORM

Is First Fatal Accident of New Aerial Post Service.

Aurora, Ill.—Charles Gilbert, relief air mail pilot and first of the night flying mail men to lose his life in the service of the government, was killed Sunday night in a plunge to earth, it was disclosed when the body was found near Kaneville, 50 miles west of Chicago.

His parachute apparently had failed him in a leap in the dark and the cold as the snow swirled down about him

For six months the transcontinental air mail has carried its valuable freight without a serious accident until Gilbert vanished from the night lighted overland trail.

For 15 hours farmer searchers and representatives of the air mail had scouted around the open country near Kaneville, where the lights of the lost pilot's plane last were observed. Searchers came upon the wrecked plane a mile north of Kaneville with the mail intact.

A short time later the farmer searchers found the body of Gilbert, a part of the torn parachute still attached to his belt.

Since the establishment of night flying in the transcontinental day and night air mail last July 1, the postal pilots have carried their cargoes with the same fidelity characteristic of the United States mails and without a single serious accident, according to air mail officials.

U. S. Missionaries Recovering.

London.—Professor P. R. Gleason and Mrs. Gleason, American Baptist missionaries who were severely beaten by a mob at Rangoon, Burma, in October, are bound for home. The quiet of the voyage from India restored them to almost normal health, although Mrs. Gleasin, a former Boston girl, still is suffering from shock. Her head bears two scars where she was struck by attackers who felled her twice while her husband, with only an umbrella for a weapon, endeavored to beat them off.

STOPS WORK FOR HOLIDAYS

Leaders Of Congress Regard Progress Made In Legislation So Far Excellent

Washington.—Congress quit work Saturday for over the Christmas holidays after setting up what leaders regarded as a good record of legislative accomplishment in the first three weeks of its present short session.

Three of the nine annual supply bills were passed by the house and sent to the senate, where committees have completed consideration of one of them, and are well advanced with the work on a second one.

The senate passed two important measures left over from the last session—the $100,000,000 bill for modernizing the battle fleet and the construction of eight additional light cruisers, and the $186,000,000 deficiency bill, carrying funds for putting the soldiers bonus into operation, and enacting a new reclamation policy.

In addition, congress approved the war debt settlements with Poland and Lithuania, and sent to the president a resolution appropriating $100,000 for use in curbing the European fowl plague, and other poultry diseases.

Four new rum treaties—those with France, Canada, the Netherlands and Panama—were ratified by the senate and a number of measures of minor importance were passed by each house.

After the holiday recess the house will turn to a fourth appropriation bill, that for the postoffice and treasury, while the senate will continue consideration of the Muscle Shoals question. Early in January it will act on the president's veto of the postal employes' salary bill and after Muscle Shoals is put out of the way it will take up the Isle of Pines treaty under a unanimous consent agreement for final action on this convention with Cuba which has been pending for 20 years.

FINANCE AGENCY REPORTS

Bank Deposits, Business Much Better in Agricultural Districts.

Washington.—An encouraging picture of conditions in the agricultural regions was reported to congress in the annual summary of the war finance corporation.

"Most of the important farming districts," the report said, "are in better shape than they have been for several years. Bank deposits have increased, bank reserves are being restored, business has greatly improved and the farmers generally are making excellent progress in cleaning up the burden of indebtedness under which they have been laboring and in strengthening their economic position."

The price of range cattle, the report said, has not followed the trend of prices of other agricultural commodities and conditions in the breeding end of the industry were described as still unsatisfactory.

Approval of 561 applications for agricultural and livestock loans totaling $12,240,000, was made by the corporation during the year ending November. The amount, the report said, is a "substantial reduction from the preceding year and evidence of the general improvement in the agricultural situation as well as in the condition of country banks."

Loans outstanding on the corporation's books, as of November 30, totaled $62,623,000 of which $16,975,000 was for war loans; and $45,648,000 for agricultural and livestock loans.

7 DIE IN RAILWAY DISASTER

Coach Falls 60 Feet From Trestle Into Stream—3 Missing, 8 Injured.

Chippewa Falls, Wis.—Seven persons were killed, three others are reported missing and eight were injured when the last coach of an eastbound Soo Line passenger train plunged from the trestle over the Chippewa river here Saturday into the icy waters 60 feet below.

Six of the dead had been identified as Mrs. Harry Jones, Sioux City, Iowa; Charles M. Pardoe, Minneapolis; Barbara Spencer, six months old daughter of M. L. Spencer of Seattle; Kenneth J. Henderson of Moose Jaw, Sask.; Mrs. Florence Higus of Minneapolis, and Richard W. Sharp of Toronto.

The one unidentified dead is a man and authorities say they have no tangible clew to his identity.

Eight persons were taken to St. Joseph's hospital here to receive medical or surgical attention and the condition of three or four of them was considered serious, due to injuries and exposure.

A broken switch bolt apparently was the cause of the accident, which occurred as the train was pulling into Chippewa Falls over the 700 foot trestle that spans the Chippewa river, about a half mile from the railroad station.

Offers Forest Bill.

Washington.—A ten-year program under which $40,000,000 would be appropriated for purchase of forest land and for forest conservation under the Clarke-McNary law and other conservation measures would be authorized under a bill introduced in the senate by Senator McNary, Republican, Oregon, and in the house by Representative Woodruff, Republican, Michigan. Purchase of about 8,000,000 acres would be made, principally in the eastern and Great Lakes water shed territories

Traced to Fourth Century

Archbishop Trench says the proverb that one should not "look a gift horse in the mouth" is as old as Jerome of the Fourth century, who, when some one found fault with certain writings of his, replied that they were free-will offerings, and that it did not behoove one to look a gift horse in the mouth.

Gleaners Notified

In many places in England, where agricultural reaping machinery is not used, the gleaner's bell may still be heard in harvest days. The bell notifies the village folk that they may begin to glean the fields. It is rung from the church tower as soon as harvesting is sufficiently advanced for gleaning to be permissible.

Watch Cuticura Improve Your Skin. On rising and retiring gently smear the face with Cuticura Ointment. Wash off Ointment in five minutes with Cuticura Soap and hot water. It is wonderful what Cuticura will do for poor complexions, dandruff, itching and red, rough hands.—Advertisement.

Airship of 1709

According to the text accompanying a curious print published in Vienna in 1709, the attractive qualities of the so-called coral agate were to be used in an airship, the invention of a Brazilian priest. Over the aviator's head was a network of iron to which large coral agates were attached. These were expected to help in drawing up the ship when, through the heat of the sun's rays, the stones had acquired magnetic power.

Hickory Has Rival

Woods found in certain parts of India are likely to become rivals of the American hickory, long preferred for ax and hammer handles. The government in India is making exhaustive tests of the Parrotia Jacquemontiana with particular reference to its ability to withstand strain, and results to date show that it compares favorably with hickory and it is now being cut on a commercial basis.

Boschee's Syrup

Allays irritation, soothes and heals throat and lung inflammation. The constant irritation of a cough keeps the delicate mucus membrane of the throat and lungs in a congested condition, which BOSCHEE'S SYRUP gently and quickly heals. For this reason it has been a favorite household remedy for colds, coughs, bronchitis and especially for lung troubles in millions of homes all over the world for the last fifty-eight years, enabling the patient to obtain a good night's rest, free from coughing with easy expectoration in the morning. You can buy BOSCHEE'S SYRUP wherever medicines are sold.—Adv.

The Unspoiled Prince

The various stories about the prince coming back with a strong Yankee accent are of course all nonsense. CHAPTER VII—Continued

—11—

As it fell, the other leaped at her as if strung upon wires. Joan saw, very dimly, the face of Mrs. Dana. She was in her nightdress, with her feet bare, and the ferocity of her attack seemed atrocious in contrast with the expressionless, masklike features. Only the eyes seemed alive, and they burned with implacable hatred, as if they meditated revenge for all the accumulation of a life's wrongs.

The woman bore Joan backward. The lamp fell crashing to the floor in a debacle of splintered glass. A chair was overturned. Mrs. Dana's hands sought Joan's throat, and they struggled in the darkness, crashing here and there, upsetting the water pitcher, smashing into the swinging door. Underneath her Joan heard Mrs. Fraser moving, and doors opening. There were steps on the stairs.

For a few moments Joan felt no match for the onset of the madwoman. But Mrs. Dana's impulse was soon exhausted. Joan got her arms about her body, pressing down the other's arms to her sides. Mrs. Dana suddenly became passive, and the lights in the eyes seemed to go out like extinguished candles as the brain clouded. Joan got the woman into the corridor. At the farther end a little lamp was burning.

Mrs. Dana went with her quietly, walking like a mechanical figure. At the head of the stairs appeared the matron, wearing a white wrapper. Behind her Joan saw the startled faces of Myers and Lancaster.

The girl led Mrs. Dana into her room, and Mrs. Fraser came at her heels, breathing hard in terror.

"Did she hurt you?" she gasped. "How did she get out? Who let her out? I should have told you she was dangerous, but I never dreamed that she could pick that lock. Did she—did she try to harm you?"

"She had a piece of glass," said Joan, "but I took it away from her."

"There was no glass in her room last evening," said the matron with conviction.

Lancaster was approaching. Joan was astounded to see the look of anger on his face. "Who opened that door?" he shouted.

"It's all right now, Doctor Lancaster," came the matron's voice from within.

But Lancaster was shaking with excitement. He swung round upon Myers.

"You are responsible for this!" he cried. "You know my one point that has to be carried out. I told you to have a bolt put on the door after she got out before."

"Now, now, doctor," don't excite yourself," said the secretary soothingly. "You're a sick man, you know. It was unfortunate, but I'll see it doesn't happen again."

Lancaster seemed beside himself with fury, far more angry, indeed, than the situation appeared to warrant.

"She might have killed Miss Wentworth!" he stormed. "I've stood enough from you without this. I've suffered you, God knows, until you've sapped my strength and crushed me under your feet, and made me less of a man than the meanest drunkard in Millville, but now it's ended. Get out of my sight! Leave the institute tomorrow!"

"Say," shouted Myers, "am I responsible if that woman got out of her room? What's the sense of picking on me? Didn't you hire a nurse to take care of your patients. Ain't Mrs. Dana a patient? Now there's been enough said, I reckon. You know what I mean, doctor. Better go back to your room and forget what you've said tonight."

"If ever I see your face after tonight, by G—d I'll kill you!" shouted Lancaster.

Myers slunk away toward the stairs. "O, all right, all right," he answered. "I reckon you'll be sorry tomorrow. But I'll hold you to what you've said. I ain't going to see that nurse bust up my work here."

He scowled fearfully at Joan as he went down the stairs, a grotesque, almost deformed figure in his loose pajamas. But Joan hardly heeded the man. She did not know the cause of Lancaster's sudden outbreak of rage, but she knew that it was part of the whole dreadful problem, and that, in fighting Lancaster's driving devil, she was at work upon the darkest corner of the dark mystery.

"I think, Doctor Lancaster, you had better go and lie down again," she said. "No harm has been done, but I am very sorry you were awakened."

He was leaning against the wall looking at her with a strange expression upon his face. He breathed quickly, like a man in uncontrollable agitation. Just then the matron came out of Mrs. Dana's room.

"How did it happen, Mrs. Fraser?" asked Lancaster.

The matron snapped the key in the lock before answering. "I don't know, Doctor Lancaster," she answered. "The lock's all right. It couldn't have been picked. And I swear I locked it last night. Somebody must have let her out."

"That hound—!" began Lancaster, but Joan interposed. "She may have found a key," she said.

The matron shook her head. "No key would fit that lock, except the right one," she answered.

"Why should anyone tamper with that lock?" Lancaster muttered. Suddenly he broke down and covered his face with his hands. His shoulders shook convulsively. Joan put her hand on his arm.

"Doctor Lancaster, you must go back to your room now," she said. "It was nothing, and it is all ended."

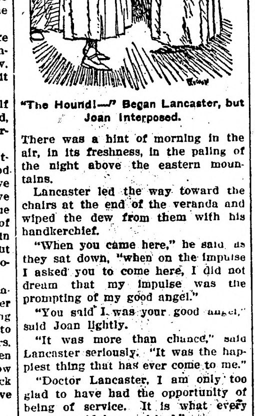
"Miss Wentworth, if you will stay with me till six it will help me to master myself. It is not the wear of yielding to morphine; it is my thoughts. If you knew how one's life comes crowding upon one in the darkness—"

"I'll stay with you," said Joan.

"Let us wait on the veranda," said Lancaster. "The air is stifling in this house. Put on a wrap and I will wait for you there."

Joan ran upstairs and slipped on her cloak. When she got back Lancaster had not moved from the door. The secretary was packing noisily in his room.

They went outside together, closing the front door behind them, as if to shut in the evil influences in the place.



"The Hound!—" Began Lancaster, but Joan Interposed.

There was a hint of morning in the air, in its freshness, in the paling of the night above the eastern mountains.

Lancaster led the way toward the chairs at the end of the veranda and wiped the dew from them with his handkerchief.

"When you came here," he said, as they sat down, "when on the impulse I asked you to come here, I did not dream that my impulse was the prompting of my good angel."

"You said I was your good angel," said Joan lightly.

"It was more than chance," said Lancaster seriously. "It was the happiest thing that has ever come to me."

"Doctor Lancaster, I am only too glad to have had the opportunity of being of service. It is what every nurse would have wished."

"No," he corrected her. "You have brought more than service into the institute. Do you know what you have brought? Hope!"

She could hardly restrain her tears, so deeply was she moved. She put her hand upon his. "Doctor Lancaster, it must never leave you again," she answered. "Lift up your eyes and look at the hills. How can one help but hope? Hope lies all about you."

"When a man lives in darkness," said Lancaster gravely, "he cannot lift up his eyes. I was broken long before I became a victim of that damnable drug. I fell into the hands of unscrupulous men. I had nothing to live for. I dwelt in shadows, hardly knowing the dream from the reality, and all the men and women about me seemed like shadows until you came. I could endure my life only because of its unreality; it was like a dream, a nightmare, which, I knew, could not last forever."

She did not answer, and he remained silent for a long time It began to lighten. Streaks of saffron appeared against the tops of the hills A bird awoke and called; another answered her.

"But this is hope," said Lancaster, taking Joan's hand. "You have brought it to me, and I am never going to lose it again. I am going to win my fight against the drug, and then I am going to regain all else that I have lost."

He seemed upon the verge of a revelation, but he said no more. And now the day was dawning.

"You have made a splendid fight, Doctor Lancaster," she said. "Now you shall have your hypodermic."

He rose up eagerly, and she could see the terrific strain that he was undergoing in the trembling of his limbs, the eager look in his eyes. They went back into the house. A light still burned in the secretary's room, but no sound came from it. At the door of Lancaster's room he stopped.

"Miss Wentworth," he said, "I have something to say, and something to promise. I am not going to take that dose. Tonight, perhaps, but not now. If I take it and free my body from its suffering, I lose my soul again. I lose that hope which you have given me. And—I want to give you this."

He handed her a little bottle of morphine, three-quarters full.

"It is the bottle which you took from the drawer of my desk yesterday," he said. "I stole it from your pocket when you leaned over me last night, when you told me I was winning. I was a thief—but I am a penitent thief, and I restore it intact."

"No, Doctor Lancaster," answered the girl, smiling as she took the bottle from him. "That has no bearing upon your character; it was a symptom of your disease."

"Well, I didn't take any," said Lancaster, with the transient flash of humor lighting up his face. "I had the hardest conceivable battle over that bottle. I set it up before me, and I held my right hand back with my left, and I said, 'I am winning, in Joan Wentworth's name.' And at last the drug devil was beaten. And no more morphine until tonight."

"Doctor Lancaster, you have been brave and wonderful!" cried Joan, profoundly stirred. "Remember that! One of the bravest men I have ever known. Never tell me again that you have lost your power of will. We are winning fast."

He placed his hands upon her shoulders and stood looking at her. Upon his face was an expression of indulgence, as if he was considering her enthusiasm in the light of his experience of life, so much deeper than hers, so much the more profound. Then the look passed; the years seemed to fall from him, and strength came into his face.

"God bless you, my dear," he said, and bent and kissed her forehead.

She turned and ran upstairs. Her heart was singing in her breast. The flood of sunlight that came through the eastern windows, illuminating the dusty interior of the old building, seemed like a spiritual light, flaming into this dark place where shadows had dwelt so long. She went into her room and dressed for the day. She had never felt so happy before. And now the life in Avonmouth had become as dim as a dream, and she cared no longer whether she returned or not. A charge had been granted to her, a man's life put into her keeping; that trust she meant to fulfill.

She had saved Lancaster, and she would outwit Myers, and remove the only obstacle to Lancaster's recovery. She knew the man incited the doctor to drug himself. She would have known that even without the matron's statement to her. But why should Myers wish Lancaster to drug himself to death?

He must be acting for others. Whom? No matter. Once the drug evil was overcome, the plot would be revealed and overthrown.

As she stood at her window Joan heard footsteps on the path below. Looking down, she saw the secretary leaving the house, carrying a suitcase. Her heart almost stood still. Surely Myers had not acknowledged defeat and taken Lancaster at his word? Surely he did not mean to go without another struggle?

She watched him cross the grass beside the chicken coop to where the weed-grown path joined the winding road. He was outside the grounds of the institute now, and he was still going in the direction of the station. He disappeared behind the hedges, appeared again, a long way off, and vanished finally. He was gone, and the air seemed the sweeter, the day more glorious.

Joan almost danced downstairs to the dining room. Lancaster was at the table, waiting for her.

"Mr. Myers has gone away!" she cried. "Doctor Lancaster, your evil spirit has departed, suitcase and all."

Lancaster looked at her gravely. "I know," he said.

"Did he come to you? Did you discharge him?"

"He did not come to me. He did not tell the matron he was going. It looks bad."

"No," said Joan firmly struggling against her conviction. "He was afraid. You will never see him again."

"You know what the Bible says about the unclean spirit who leaves a man, and returns with seven others, when he finds his home swept and garnished?"

"Doctor Lancaster, he has no hold on you. He can do nothing and he will never dare to return."

"Well, my dear, we have a respite at all events," Lancaster answered. "So, let us eat our breakfast, and afterward I'll take you for a ramble through the woods, and we'll hold the fort together until evening."

WEEKLY MENU SUGGESTIONS

Menu planning is the scientific method by which well-balanced meals, with variety and a minimum of labor may be served to the family.

SUNDAY—Breakfast: Fruit, eggs, bacon, coffee cake. Dinner: Baked ham, Denver potatoes, apple pie. Supper: Mush and milk.

MONDAY—Breakfast: Orange, oatmeal, cream, buttered toast. Dinner: Baked hash, lettuce salad, custard pie. Supper: Sardines on toast, cookies, tea.

TUESDAY—Breakfast: Grapes, fried mush, bacon. Dinner: Roast of beef, buttered beets. Supper: Baked apples, cottage cheese.

WEDNESDAY — Breakfast: Plums, cereal with top milk. Dinner: Sliced cold roast, curried apples, baked potatoes. Supper: Milk toast, preserves, sponge cake.

THURSDAY—Breakfast: Grapefruit, farina with dates. Dinner: Roast chicken, boiled rice, apple and celery salad. Supper: Canned fruit, baking powder biscuit.

FRIDAY — Breakfast: Bananas, corn flakes, doughnuts. Dinner: Stuffed baked fish, boiled potatoes, steamed pudding. Supper: Omelet with jelly, brown bread, chocolate cake.

SATURDAY — Breakfast: Baked apple, bran, bacon, toast, coffee. Dinner: Beef potpie with vegetables, gelatin jelly with cream. Supper: Creamed dried beef on toast, cocoa.

Denver Potatoes.

Peel even-sized potatoes and cut in halves lengthwise. Scoop out the center with a ball cutter, trim to stand evenly, fill the cavity with butter, sprinkle with salt and paprika and bake in a baking dish surrounded with a little water.

Curried Apples.

Fill six cored apples with one-half cupful of sugar mixed with one teaspoonful of curry powder and one teaspoonful of lemon rind. Bake until tender.

The wood is bare; a river-mist is steeping
The trees that winter's chill of life bereaves.
Only their stiffened boughs break silence, weeping
Over their fallen leaves.
—Robert Bridges.

HOT PUDDINGS

At this season of the year steamed and baked puddings are much enjoyed

A plain pudding with a good, well-seasoned sauce will often be preferred to a rich pudding.

Ginger Pudding.—Cream one-third of a cupful of butter, add one-half cupful of sugar gradually and one egg well beaten; mix and sift two and one-fourth cupfuls of flour with three and one-half teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt and two teaspoonfuls of ginger. Add the dry ingredients alternately with one cupful of milk to the first mixture. Turn into a buttered mold, cover and steam two hours. Serve with:

Vanilla Sauce.—Mix one half cupful of sugar with one tablespoonful of cornstarch, add one cupful of boiling water, boil five minutes, add two tablespoonfuls of butter, one teaspoonful of vanilla, a few gratings of nutmeg and a little salt

Cottage Pudding.—Cream two tablespoonfuls of butter with three-fourths of a cupful of sugar. Beat two eggs, add one-half cupful of milk, mix with the butter and sugar add one and one-fourth cupfuls of flour sifted with two tablespoonfuls of baking powder. Bake in a small sheet. Cut into squares and serve with:

Pudding Sauce.—Mix a tablespoonful of flour with one-half cupful of sugar, add one-half cupful of boiling water and cook until smooth. Add two tablespoonfuls of butter and a grating of nutmeg. Serve hot.

Steamed Cranberry Pudding.—Cream one-half cupful of butter, add one cupful of sugar gradually, three eggs well beaten, one-half cupful of milk three and one-half cupfuls of flour, one and one-fourth tablespoonfuls of baking powder and one and one half cupfuls of cranberries. Cream the butter, add the sugar, eggs well beaten. Mix and sift the flour and the baking powder and add alternately to the first mixture; stir in the berries, turn into a buttered mold, cover and steam three hours. Serve with thin cream sweetened and flavored with nutmeg.

Sour Cream Fruit Cake.—Cream one-half cupful of butter with one cupful of sugar. Add one-half of a grated nutmeg, one teaspoonful each of cloves and cinnamon and one-half teaspoonful of powdered ginger. Add a cupful of warm molasses, to which a scant teaspoonful of soda has been added, dissolved in a bit of water, and one-half cupful of sour cream. Add the yolks of two beaten eggs and flour to make a thick batter. Beat in the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs and lastly add one-half pound each of raisin and currants and one-half cupful of nuts all well floured. Bake in a tube cake pan well greased and lined with greased paper. Bake in a slow oven with careful watching

Out-of-the-Way Places Have Queer Currency

Queen Mary was the first English ruler to date her coins. Edward VI first used a value mark when he put Roman numerals on the 12-pence piece. Oliver Cromwell is accredited with introducing inscriptions on the edge of coins to prevent chipping off the silver pieces of his day.

Since the gold stater of Philip of Macedon found universal acceptance gold has been king in international exchange. But there are places in the world today where primitive currency prevails—ivory tusks, sheep, shells, furs, olive oil and coconuts. If civilized man would do business with many African tribes he must forego money, hence a famous London firm, which barters European manufactured goods for palm oil, gold dust, cotton, gum and coffee with natives who haven't attained a money status.—National Geographic Society Bulletin.

Broadcasting Cough

When Gov. Al Smith's speech was broadcast at Manchester, N. H., Edward Murphy sat on the stage and interrupted some of the early speakers by coughing. Half a mile away at his home in the residential part of the city Mrs. Murphy, attending the rally by radio, heard the cough, recognized it as Ed's and sent the son of the family posthaste with some tablets to relieve the husband and father and prevent his further interference with the success of the occasion.

"Poisoned" by Radio

Mental patients held in British asylums have recently made a wide variety of complaints to the royal commission into lunacy, which has been investigating the asylums and the patients intrusted to their care. One of the patients complained that he was being poisoned by radio, while another said that communism was being injected into him by psychoanalysis.

Radium Rays From Animals

Living plants and animals are radioactive, giving out rays like radium, according to Albert Nodon, French scientist, says Popular Science Monthly. Recently Nodon exhibited three photographic plates on each of which were unmistakable light impressions. These, he asserted, were caused by the rays emitted by a radioactive mineral, an insect and a green leaf that had been placed on the emulsion side of the plates in a dark room.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that default has been made in the conditions of a mortgage executed by Morris A. Olson, mortgagor, to The Lawerence Mortgage Company, a Corporation, mortgagee, dated March 1st, 1920, and recorded in the Office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on April 1st, 1920, at 1 o'clock P. M., in Book 100 of Mortgages, on Page 21 thereof; that such default consists in the non-payment of the interest that fell due September 1st, 1921 on the note described in and secured by said mortgage when the same fell due and all subsequent payments are now in default; that the mortgagee has elected to declare and has declared the whole amount principal and interest upon said mortgage due and payable; that the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at this date is Eleven Hundred twenty and 50-100 Dollars ($1120.50).

That the premises described in and covered by said mortgage are described as follows, to-wit: South Half of the Northeast Quarter (S1-2 NE1-4) of Section Twenty-five (25), Township One Hundred Fifty-five (155) North, of Range Forty (40) West, of the Fifth Principal Meridian in Minnesota, containing Eighty (80) acres, more or less, according to the United States Government Survey thereof, situate in Marshall County, Minnesota.

MOST IMPORTANT NEWS OF WORLD

Big Happenings of the Week Condensed for the Benefit of Busy Readers.

Washington

Washington—The nation spent considerable more than $117,175,741 for its perfumes, cosmetics and toilet preparations last year, according to figures made public by the census bureau showing an increase over 1921 of approximately $26,000,000.

Washington—Extension of executive clemency as a Christmas gift by the President was limited this year to one person, John Rohrer of San Jose, Calif., whose life sentence was commuted to 20 years. Rohrer thus becomes eligible for pardon upon immediate application.

Washington — Discontinuances of the six division offices of the American Red Cross February 15 was announced by John Barton Payne, chairman of the society, as a means of bringing the chapters into more direct relationship with national offices.

Washington—Coal mine accidents last month killed 155 men, the bureau of mines announced. An increase in fatalities was registered in the Pennsylvania anthracite region, where 41 were killed, while the remainder died in bituminous mines in every section of the country. Coal mine deaths for the first 11 months of 1924 total 2,136, or 4.22 per cent for each 1,000,000 tons of coal produced.

Domestic

Ossining, N. Y.—Oysters were the source of the typhoid infections from which Frank A. Vanderlip is suffering at his home in Scarborough, the banker's physician announced.

Manila—A typhoon which prevailed over the Visayan islands to the southwest caused heavy crop damage, especially to rice, and has driven practically all of the inter-island shipping into port.

Waco, Texas—Mistaking a torpedo for a piece of candy put R. F. Martin of Dallas, a Waco visitor, in a hospital here over Christmas. He bit into the torpedo and it exploded, lacerating and burning his mouth and jaw.

Los Angeles—Charlie Chaplin is looking for a new leading woman to replace Lita Grey, and Edna Purviance has returned to Hollywood ready to go to work after five months in the wilds of Wyoming.

Chicago—A guard of honor made up of Springfield, Ill., school children will accompany the 200 Boy Scouts of Chicago who will visit the tomb of Abraham Lincoln at Springfield. Chicago Kiwanians are sponsoring the pilgrimage.

Dallas—General James M. Cochran, 78 years old, commander of the trans-Mississippi river department of the United Confederate Veterans, and commander of the Sterling Price camp of Dallas, died in a hospital here.

Utica, N. Y.—Mrs. Eleanor Kibbe, 102 years old, one of the oldest women in New York state, died at her home in Stratford, near Dolgeville. Mrs. Kibbe, a warm admirer of President Coolidge, recently received a personal letter from the President.

New York—Jeremiah Milbank, philanthropist, has presented a gift of $200,000 to the Institute for Crippled and Disabled Men, it was announced at a Christmas party in the institution. The income from this sum will be used for the training of disabled men, the announcement said.

Greenville, Mass.—Charles M. Hawley of Little Rock was near death at Greenville hospital as a result of a fall when the parachute with which he had leaped from an airplane at Shaw, Miss., sideslipped and became entangled in telephone wires 25 feet above the ground.

Plymouth, Mass.—In bitter cold which recalled the hardships suffered by the Pilgrims after their landing 304 years ago, Plymouth dedicated its new $300,000 memorial community center. Zero weather kept expected visitors away and sent a smaller parade over a shorter route to the laying of the cornerstone.

New York—Rafael Sabatini, for his novel "Scaramouche," has been awarded the $10,000 prize offered by Adolph Zukor to the writer whose story or play made the best motion picture in the year which ended last September 1, the Authors' League of America, through which the award was made, announced.

New York—Viscount Cecil of Chelwood, better known in America as Lord Robert Cecil, the leading proponent of the League of Nations in the British empire, arrived on the liner Olympic to attend a dinner in his honor when he will be presented with a $25,000 peace prize by the Woodrow Wilson foundation as the man of the present day to have done most toward promoting world peace.

New York—Fifteen new cases of typhoid were reported to the health department bringing the total number now under treatment here to 400.

Scranton, Pa.—Twelve thousand employees of the Lehigh Valley Coal Company who are to take a vote this week on the question of joining in a sympathetic strike with the 12,000 employees of the Pennsylvania Coal Company, who have been idle three weeks, were warned by district union leaders today that any such action will be recognized as a violation of union laws and would be dealt with accordingly.

Benton, Ill.—Fire, believed to have started from an oil stove, virtually destroyed a business block here, with a loss estimated at $200,000.

Fine Bluff, Ark.—Santa Claus appeared at a Pine Bluff home in the form of a Christmas turkey. When Mrs. M. Greenhill started to dress a turkey which she had purchased from a local groceryman, she found a diamond ring valued at $150 and a 10 cent piece in the fowl's craw.

Sports

New York—Protests by New York fans against the deal, whereby the Yankees regained possession of Urban Shocker, continued in increasing volume. The consensus was that the Yankees had got the worst of the transaction in sending Joe Bush, pitcher and pinch hitter, and Milton Gaston and Joe Giard, recruit pitchers, to St. Louis for the veteran spitballer. Much of the dissatisfaction is centered around Bush, who not only pitched good ball but hit well while in a Yankee uniform.

New York—In an interview made public, John McGraw stated that Heinie Groh would start the 1925 season at third base for the New York Giants, with Fred Lindstrom, juvenile sensation of the last world series, sitting on the bench. "Groh played great ball during the European tour," McGrew declared. "He is ready to take his place with the best of them right now. I have nothing but praise for young Lindstrom, but he can view a few more games from the bench without doing him any harm.

Foreign

Santiage, Chile—Pedro Leon Ugalde, former radical deputy, was convicted by courtmartial of plotting to subverse public order and instigate sedition among troops. He was sentenced to three years banishment from Chile.

Sienna, Italy—Emilio Gallori, the noted sculptor is dead here. His most noted works include a monument to Garibaldi recently erected in the gardens of the Janiculum at Rome, and a monument to King Victor Emmanuel II, dedicated in 1911 at Rome.

Vienna—One of the largest water-power plants on the continent, located at Partenkirchen, Upper Austria, was opened recently and, within the next few months, will begin generating electricity for all of Vienna and its immediate vicinity.

Manila—The insular government has taken steps to protect the Philippine pearl beds and the pearling industry by ordering closed certain portions of the pearl fishing field around Mindanao and Suin, during alternate periods ranging from three to five years.

Belgaum, British India—The committee of the Indian national congress, by a vote of 160 to 19, approved a pact between Mohandas Ghandi, president-elect of the congress, and the Swarajists whereby nonco-operation will be suspended and the Swarajists permitted to represent the national congress in the legislative bodies.

Paris—Paris is taking admiringly of M. Robineau, governor of the Bank of France, because he has refused a salary calculated on the basis of the depreciated franc. He still draws as compensation the same number of francs he did before the war. "I came into this bank poor and I shall leave it poor," says M. Robineau. The minister of finance recently divulged this about M. Robineau in the chamber, and all the deputies applauded.

Tripoli—While Count Giuseppe Volpi, governor of Tripoli, was visiting the excavations at Sabrata, the most important of the Phoenician tombs, recently there was unearthed a gigantic bust which is believed to represent the African Jove. In addition to the bust, a number of funeral urns and vases of great value were discovered in the ruins of a neighboring temple. The excavators also found a statue of a Roman emperor and a quantity of decorative marbles of the highest artistic quality.

Dublin—The Free State government's bill to regulate the sale of drink has passed the senate. Among other things it restricts the hours of sale to 13 a day and puts clubs of all classes on the same footing as ordinary drink saloons as far as the serving of liquor is concerned. An interesting provision of the new law is the standardizing of the size of porter bottles. These bottles formerly average 12 to the gallon, but many publicans, while charging the same price per bottle, have recently been putting a gallon into 16 bottles.

Christiania—The name Christiania, which the capital of Norway has borne for 300 years, will be replaced January 1 by Oslo, the ancient name by which the city was known for 600 years. Nine hundred years ago King Harold III founded Oslo. Then, 600 years later, this city on the fjord that winds down to the Skaggerack lay in ashes. King Christian, then ruler of Norway and Denmark, founded a new town across the bay, calling it Christiania. The two cities grew up side by side until today they are one and on New Year the ancient designation, Oslo, will be restored.

Paris—Viscount D'eza, former Spanish war minister, came to Paris for the announced purpose of obtaining an apology or satisfaction from Vicente Blasco Ibanez, Spanish author, for statements regarding him in Ibanez's pamphlet against King Alfonso.

Dundee, Scotland—V T Johnson laborite was elected to parliament over the liberal candidate E. D. Simon. Johnson received 22,943 votes and Simon 10,234. The by-election was made necessary by the death of Edmund Dene Morel, the labor member.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Faribault—F. H. Klemer of the Faribault Woolen Mill Company reports that prices for raw fleece wool are now at the highest price since 1920.

Royalton—Burglars have been busy here, entering at least four business houses, but getting only a small amount of cash and some merchandise.

Faribault—What is considered one of the most successful of the Christmas sales conducted by any group in Minneosta this year was conducted at the school for the feebleminded here.

Minneapolis—The Silver anniversary of the automobile industry will be celebrated with the Twin City Auto Show this week of Jan. 31 to Feb. 7 in the Overland building, Midway district.

Faribault—The Faribault Chamber of Commerce has gone on record in favor of the legislative program of the Ten Thousand Lakes Association, calling for an appropriation of $60,000 for the biennial period.

Floodwood—Six persons were injured, five seriously, when fire destroyed the Floodwood hotel, a three story frame building here, causing a loss of $15,000.

Waseca—Tuesday to Friday, September 3 to 11, inclusive, were the dates set for the 1925 Waseca County Fair at the reorganization meeting of the board of directors of the Waseca Agricultural Society.

Blooming Prairie—Plans for a corn show for the farming community surrounding Blooming Prairie are being completed by the Steele County Farm Bureau and the Blooming Prairie Commercial Club.

Kasson—A conference between village officials and heads of the state highway department completed arrangements whereby Main street will be paved through joint action of the village and state.

Gaylord—Fifty-three persons died from tuberculosis in the last five years in Sibley county, according to public health figures. Twelve died in 1923 and there are now 108 active cases in the county.

Crookston—The county health association of Polk and Norman counties, including the tuberculosis sanitorium committee of the two counties and the Red Cross, will begin a crusade against tuberculosis and other preventable diseases with the new year.

Minneapolis—Announcement of a subscription of $50,000 to Hamline university by T. B. Walker of Minneapolis, was made at the offices of the Hamline University Advance. His son, Gilbert Walker, gave $10,000.

Minneapolis—The condition of Mrs. Magnus Johnson, wife of the junior U. S. senator from Minnesota, showed further improvement, attendants reported. Mrs. Johnson is recovering from an operation to relieve inflammation of the gall bladder.

Owatonna—Plans for a "dairy center" sale of Holstein cattle February 24 and for a meeting of all Steele county livestock breeders January 15 were made at a meeting of the Steele County Holstein Breeders Association here.

St. Cloud—Sebastian P. Wimmer, president of the Stearns county farm bureau unit, died suddenly at his home in this city. His death was a shock to all interested in agricultural matters in central Minnesota, in which he had been active for years.

St. Paul—A reduction during the last year of $2,300,000, from a former total of $18,000,000 to a present total of $16,709,000, in the direct obligation of the state of Minnesota covered by direct tax levy was announced by Henry Rines, state treasurer.

Heron Lake—Because the management of the local motion picture theater declares business does not warrant the improvement of his place, local citizens have taken up the subject of establishing a community picture theater.

Owatonna—A local unit of the Minnesota Game Protective league formed here by about 150 Owatonna and Steele county sportsmen, as the result of efforts by State Senator W. C. Zamboni and George Huber, local game warden.

Gaylord—Sibley county will raise $528,000 in taxes in 1925. This is a reduction of $60,000 from last year.

Ortonville—Nearly 200 people attended the annual meeting of the Big Stone County Agricultural Association at Clinton.

Winona—Steps to replace the old school and to gather equipment in an effort to resume classes after the holiday recess, were well advanced by the school board of Spring Grove, near here, as an aftermath of the fire. The blaze destroyed the school building with an estimated loss of more than $100,000.

Blue Earth—R. L. Lord of Wells was awarded the office of state representative of this district by Judge Dean of Fairmont, in district court here, in the contest brought by Vincent Hunt of Bricelyn.

Duluth—Three persons were burned to death in fires in northeastern Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Peterson, pioneers of the Silver Creek district, lost their lives when fire destroyed their home near Two Harbors. Erick Erickson, 40 years old laborer, died when a shed in which he was sleeping, seven miles northeast of Brimson, was burned.

Faribault—Increased cash premiums have been added to the list for the annual show of the Cannon Valley Poultry association, which is to be held here Jan. 6 to 9.

Rochester—For the first time in many years Rochester will have a winter carnival, which, according to the plans, will be conduted the last week in January.

Albert Lea—The first county-wide tuberculon test in Freeborn county has been completed. Forty-six veterinarians in two weeks tested 65,000 head of cattle, finding 3,300 reactors, which were slaughtered.

Winona—Five hundred Winona families were given Christmas dinners through the generosity of "Good Fellows" operating through the Elks, Salvation Army and Christmas Club sponsored by a newspaper.

Austin—The late J. N. Nicholson of this city, in his will, left $1,000 to aid in equipping the Shaw Memorial gymnasium and $500 to the Austin Masonic Temple Association, to be applied on the new temple fund.

Winona—Now records were established at the Winona popstoffice when 51,550 letters went through the cancellation machine. The figure sets a new record for the number of letters handled through the postoffice, in any single day in its history.

Dodge Center—Dodge county swine breeders are expected to gather in force in two Dodge county points for hog feeding schools at which W. G. Zavoral and other University Farm specialists are to speak. A school will be conducted at Hayfield.

Duluth—The arrival of the new year marks the 30th anniversary of the incorporation of Duluth as a city. The village of Lakeside was the first town to be taken into the enlarged city, and over a period of four years various other units were gathered in.

Minneapolis — Direct railroad connections between Minneapolis and the Mankato district will be established early in January, when the Minneapolis, Northfield & Southern railway takes over the Mankato division of the Chicago Great Western railroad.

St. James—Seventy-five children, practising for a Christmas play, were marched to safety here when fire destroyed the Methodist church with a resultant loss of $30,000. Two nearby churches and several dwellings which were seriously threatened by the flames were saved by firemen.

Worthington — The big crop of sugar beets which was raised in the vicinity of Worthington this season has been shipped to the sugar factory at Belmont, Iowa. The shipments totaled over 9,000 tons. Growers will receive $49,500 for the crop and a bonus.

Belle Plaine—Plans are under way for the establishment of a corn flake plant here. It is proposed to house the plant in the old Kilduff cereal mill. Figures have been obtained on oven rolls and other equipment, and the promoters of the project plan to start construction April 1.

Willmar—Physicians and surgeons of eight counties met here for the annual gathering of the Central Minnesota Medical Association. Dr. R. J. Hodapp of Willmar was elected president; Dr. G. P. Freeman of Willmar, vicepresident, and Dr. C. L. Scofield, of Benson, secretary-treasurer.

St. Cloud—Fire destroyed the Catholic church in Sauk Center, entailing a loss of $15,000, most of which was covered by insurance. No one was in the church at the time of the fire, which was discovered a short time after the customary Christmas morning services.

Minneapolis—Guarded by special police squads and bank officials, $3,000,000 was moved through loop district streets from the fire wrecked building of the Marquette National Bank and the Marquette Trust Company, a temporary location. The four vaults at the bank came through the fire intact.

Owatonna—Although the state and federal cost of production statistical route, maintained the last five years on more than a score of farms in this vicinity, will end with the close of this year, the Steele County Bureau plans to capitalize the cost accounting and farm management work already done and to capitalize the benefit of the studies to individual farmers in the future.

Rochester—Major General William Crozier, chief of ordinance during the World war, and who retired from active service on December 31, 1918, has arrived in Rochester with Mrs. Crozier from Washington. General and Mrs. Crozier, after undergoing an examination at the Mayo clinic plan to leave for Vancouver, British Columbia, where they will sail early in January for China, of the first lap of a journey around the world.

Minneapolis — Minnesota co-operative farm organizations business volume during 1924 will approximate $71,445,000, managers of the organizations estimated. This will place the co-operatives ninth in the list of large industries of the state. The volume for the various lines follows: Butter, $33,200,000; livestock, $25,000,000; milk, $7,025,289; potatoes, $3,500,000; wheat, $1,877,000; poultry and eggs, $628,992; wool, $213,750.

St. Paul—Issuance of $20,000,000 highway bonds for 1925 and 1926, a 2-cent tax on gasoline, but no increase in the present motor vehicle taxes will be recommended to the governor and the Legislature in the annual report of Charles M. Babcock, state highway commissioner.

Jordan—Scott county farm bureau officials have started a campaign to induce at least 75 hog raisers in the county to enter the ton-litter contest next year. Three of the 43 farmers who finished with litters weighing more than 1 ton this year were Scott county men.

URGE SIMPLIFIED SCHOOL COURSE

Commission, Authorized By N. D. Legislature, Wants Uniform Curricula

LaMoure, N. D.—Reduction of the number of elective subjects in high school courses and prescribing of a more uniform, standard high school course; re-establishment of district lines so as to bring schools closer to children without the expense of consolidation, and a scientific revision of the entire school system in the state, are among recommendations made by the educational commission authorized by the last legislature, for the consideration of the forthcoming session. The commission is composed of W. D. Lynch, LaMoure, chairman; E. J. Taylor, Bismarck; Mary Flemington Strand, Ellendale; A. G. Storstad, Horace; and T. Welo, Velva.

Marked Progress Noted.

Though recommending many changes in the school system, the commission in its report says that "in justice to our educators and those responsible for our present system of education" education has made marked progress in the rural and urban schools of the state.

The commission's scope was limited to high schools and rural schools, but refers to higher institutions of learning in the state, "for the reason that the public may not think that all educational extravagance rests with those responsible for the primary and secondary institutions of learning in the state."

Eliminate Duplication.

The commission urges that duplication in higher institutions of learning be eliminated and "that work that can be done in the high schools should not be offered in the other state institutions as is being done now," and that the requirements for admission to the higher institutions of learning should be raised.

In an attempt to reconcile differences on the subject of what a high school curriculum should contain, the commission recommends a course of study for high schools to include:

English should be taught from two to four years.

Mathematics is essential; algebra and geometry should be required subjects of a year each, or two years of general mathematics.

General history should be taught at least a year; and each student should have a half year at least of advanced American history.

A half year of economics, half year of civics; botany and zoology should consume a year, or a year of biology in lieu thereof; chemistry and physics should be taught one year; two years of Latin should be required.

Salaries Not Too High.

The big item of high school expense is in salaries for teachers, and these are not too high, the commission finds.

A better system of buying fuel, books, and school supplies could be organized by the adoption of co-operative business methods, the report says. The average citizen is given a rap for lack of interest in educational affairs and failure to vote in school elections.

With regard to rural schools the commission "does not find that too much money is spent in rural schools. Rather the contrary. We do find, however, that for the money spent too little benefit is received in the way of education."

ASSEMBLES AFTER RECESS

Muscle Shoals Problem Has Right of Way—Still Unsettled.

Washington. — Congress, after a week's recess, put Yuletide thoughts behind and Monday buckled down to legislative tasks that promise to keep it in high gear from now until adjournment of the session March 4.

The senate still faced an unanswered problem in Muscle Shoals, which holds right of way there, with the house resuming work on appropriation bills. Three of the dozen supply measures already have been counted off and sent to the senate to leave the treasury-postoffice bill near in line for house action. Its passage there this week will clear the way for the army supply bill.

In the offing on the senate program is the calling up of the president's veto of the postal salary increase bill by unanimous consent for a vote Tuesday, January 6. Meanwhile, hearings on the administration postal rate increase bill which leaders hope to have ready for the senate by that date, will continue before the joint committee.

The senate also is pledged to take action before the windup of the session on the Isle of Pines treaty. In the house, leaders plan to dispose next month of the McFadden banking bill and perhaps the rivers and harbors authorization measure, along with appropriation bills, which will continue to have priority.

Jap Island Again Rocked by Quake.

Tokio.—Another severe earthquake which lasted two minutes, rocked Kushiro, in northeastern Japan, at 7:55 a. m. Monday. The tremor was less severe than a like disturbance last Saturday, but was followed by two after-shocks. The origin of the disturbance is attributed to the subsidence of the sea bed, about 20 miles off Kushiro. Kushiro is located in the Hokkaido group of forty islands. The earthquakes, which numbered 108 during December, were confined to the island group.

Pumpkin Pie de Luxe.

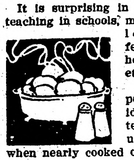
Prepare and bake the pie as usual and serve with whipped cream into which grated cheese has been stirred until thick.

Julienne of Vegetables.

Cook together carrot, turnip, celery cut in matchlike pieces; add green peas and serve in a rich cream sauce to moisten well.

'Tis easy to sing if the heart is light
And joy like a jewel glows clear and bright,
But the song of songs that reveals God's might
Is the song you sing in the darkest night.
For if you can sing when the shadows lower,
If you can sing in your bleakest hour,
'Tis because you know that good is supreme,
No matter what other powers may seem,
Because you are hearing the still, small voice,
Rejoice, I say to you, always rejoice.
—Harriet H. d'Autremont.

WITH THE COMMON POTATO



It is surprising in spite of all the teaching in schools, magazines and by lecturers, how few people know how to cook vegetables properly.

When boiling potatoes only rapidly boiling water should be used and adding when nearly cooked one tablespoonful of salt to about eight potatoes. Drain carefully and shake over the fire to dissipate all steam and leave the potatoes dry and mealy. If potatoes are to be riced, force the hot drained potatoes through a ricer; if mashed, a wooden masher used long enough to mash every lump, then add the seasoning and beat with a spoon until light and fluffy. Hot milk, butter and salt should not be added until the potatoes are thoroughly mashed. Serve at once in a hot vegetable dish. All dishes on which hot foods are to be served should be well warmed. There is nothing more unpalatable than good, hot food chilled on cold plates.

With a well-boiled potato as a basis, there are any number of good dishes one may prepare—among them are:

Savory Spanish Potato.—Turn the hot-boiled potatoes into a hot vegetable dish in which two tablespoonfuls of butter and one tablespoonful of scraped or finely chopped onion has been blended, then chop with two silver knives, mixing the butter and onion well through the potatoes. The amount of butter and onion will depend upon the number of potatoes. There is never any leftover with this dish, so provide aplenty.

Savory Potato, Another.—To four cupfuls of diced boiled potatoes add one-half cupful of finely chopped green peppers, two teaspoonfuls of salt and one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper. Put into a well-greased baking dish, sprinkle with two tablespoonfuls of flour and pour over the top one and one-half cupfuls of milk and dot with two tablespoonfuls of butter. Bake in a hot oven twelve minutes.

Chocolate Souffle.—Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter, add two tablespoonfuls of flour, and pour on gradually, while stirring constantly, three-fourths of a cupful of milk, cook until the boiling point is reached. Melt one and one-half squares of chocolate in a small saucepan placed over water; add one-half cupful of sugar and two tablespoonfuls of hot water, stir until smooth. Combine mixtures and add the yolks of three eggs beaten smooth; cool, fold in the stiffly beaten whites, add one-half teaspoonful of vanilla. Turn into a buttered baking dish and bake in a moderate oven twenty-five minutes. Serve with:

Sterling Sauce.—Cream one-half cupful of butter, add one cupful of sugar gradually and one-third teaspoonful of lemon extract and two-thirds teaspoonful of vanilla.

Mrs. Ashcroft's Remarkable Recovery After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Covington, Ky.—"I was so weak and nervous I could hardly do my housework as I could not stand because of the bearing-down pains in my back and abdomen. I sat down most of the time and did what I could do in that way—as washing dishes, etc. One day a book describing Lydia E. Pinkham's medicines was put in my mail-box. I saw how the Vegetable Compound had helped others so I gave it a trial. I had to take about a dozen bottles before I gained my strength but I certainly praise this medicine. Then I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood medicine for poor blood. I was cold all the time. I would be so cold I could hardly sit still and in the palms of my hands there would be drops of sweat. I also used the Sanative Wash and I recommend it also. You may publish this letter and I will gladly answer letters from women and advise my neighbors about these medicines."—Mrs. HARRY ASHCROFT, 632 Beech Avenue, Covington, Kentucky.

New Uses for Castor Oil

Railway chemical engineers have produced a special lubricant from castor oil, which is now being used with great success on the Chinese Eastern railway. It is said to be efficient and economical as a car lubricant. Castor oil is coming into extensive use for technical and medicinal purposes. In China it is also used as a food.—Popular Science Monthly.

Chapter VIII

—12—

By the next morning there was no doubt that victory had been won. There was color in Lancaster's face, a lightness in his step; and, best of all, he was psychically whole. The drug devil still clung to the nervous refuges of its physical domain, the hands still trembled, the man started at sudden sounds; but the shifty, furtive, lying spirit had taken its departure.

Joan only discovered afterward what Lancaster must have endured. The treatment had been more heroic than Joan had known, with her own limited experience, and the antidotes which she administered, under Lancaster's own directions, were purposely limited, for fear of supplanting one habit with another.

Lancaster had gone through the worst of his ordeal; and yet certain features of his illness were puzzling to both of them. The symptoms of morphine poisoning, elusive and protean as they are, seemed in this case irreconcilable with those classically accepted. There was Lancaster's complete prostration on the morning when Joan discovered the nature of his illness. He told her afterward that he had been conscious all the time, but physically inert, as if paralyzed. That did not point to morphine poisoning. And a certain lethargy remained one of the last symptoms of the case.

The intimacy of the sick room, born of their struggle, had become the most natural thing to both of them. The passing of Myers had wrought an extraordinary change in the atmosphere of the institution. And somehow the news of Lancaster's recovery had spread into Millville. Joan inferred that even the country people had boycotted the institute, but now two mothers brought their babies to Lancaster, and it was amazing and delightful to Joan to see the doctor's transformation, his jolliness and tenderness toward the children.

"I'm using my respite," he said whimsically. "I want to get well to face my harder battle."

"It is no respite," answered Joan. "You are free now, Doctor Lancaster; it is only a habit of thought that holds you."

There ensued three wonderful days after the secretary's departure, always to remain clear in the girl's memory. They were three days of uninterrupted recovery. After the second no more morphine was given. The fight was won; there was no questioning that.

"I suppose you will have to return to Avonmouth soon," Joan suggested.

He turned a startled look on her. "Yes—soon," he said, and fell into a gloomy meditation from which she could not arouse him.

That afternoon a telephone message came from Thompson, a hill village, fifteen miles distant. A farm-hand had been crushed by a falling tree; would Lancaster come at once and see if anything could be done for him?

"Would you like to come with me?" asked the doctor.

"If I can be of help."

"Of course you can—the greatest help. I shall need you badly, perhaps to administer an anesthetic," he answered.

Lancaster telephoned to Jenkins for the buggy, and half an hour later they were driving along the country road into the heart of the mountains. They traveled for the most part in silence; Lancaster's thoughts were occupied with his prospective case, and Joan was content to sit quietly at his side and watch the changing panorama of the land she loved and knew so well.

The road ascended continuously, until at last, when the sun was low down in the sky, they entered Thompson, a tiny settlement in the very heart of the mountain peaks.

It was a serious case, and the patient was already comatose. The tree had fallen across the chest, crushing it, and driving a rib into a lung. An immediate operation offered the only hope, and the doctor decided to perform it in the cabin.

Joan, having bundled out the family and the neighbors, administered the ether. She had never been greatly impressed by the legend of the skilled surgeon with the wonderful touch; her first operation at Avonmouth had seemed to her like a sort of glorified plumbing, and the leisurely manner of the surgeons had reduced the art to a science in her estimation. Now she revised her opinion as, seated at the patient's head, she watched Lancaster working within a compass of fractional inches, where a slip would have been deadly. His fingers, which had trembled as he held the reins, were as steady as the steel instruments he held, his deftness and precision were amazing; and when at last the operation was ended, and the patient's recovery announced as probable, she could not conceal her enthusiasm.

They were to remain at the cabin overnight in case of a change for the worse, returning to the institute in the morning. After a scrappy meal they had wandered to the end of the village, toward a patch of woodland that was encroaching on the tiny settlement. The long summer twilight still held the land, although the mountain tops were already vague and shadowy. They stood there, looking down toward the level country under them.

"I think you are the most wonderful surgeon in the world," said Joan. "And you see I didn't faint this time," she added.

"Faint? Why should you faint?" asked Lancaster, looking at her with a puzzled expression.

"You seemed to regard my weakness in the operating room as a sign of my incapacity," she replied, a little chagrined that he should have dismissed the matter from his mind.

Lancaster looked at her, with that strange glance which seemed always designed to hide his thoughts. Then his face softened.

"Joan, do you know that I owe everything on earth to you—to you, my dear?" he asked.

And he took her in his arms and kissed her.

"That's what you mean to me," he said. "I can't lose you; I want you to fill the life that you have given back to me."

And at the touch of his lips on hers Joan knew that in truth she loved him; all that she had heard of the man's past, his dissolute life, the talk of Avonmouth, was forgotten. She only knew that she loved him, not with the wild passion of which she had heard, but with a quiet and abiding fondness, none the weaker for its qualities of calmness; and it was the most natural thing in the world that she, who had given him life again, should give her own life also to this wonderful, strong man who had risen above his wrongs and driven the besetting devils from him by valorous strength. Her heart was lifted up; serene and trustful she returned his kiss.

"I love you, too," she answered. "Nothing of the past shall ever come between us."

They were at the verge of the forest, upon a height that overlooked Millville and Lancaster, hill villages, but now outspread in the shadowy plain beneath them. A dozen counties could be dimly discerned from that spot by daylight. Far in the distance were the coastal lands, nearer the cultivated belt, nearer still the little farms, and the matchless mountains all about them. It was their home country—both of them were thinking that; the smell of the rich soil was in their nostrils, and in their hearts the sense of home.

They Traveled for the Most Part in Silence.

"Joan, can a man begin to build up his life again at thirty-eight, after he has missed everything?" asked Lancaster, after a long silence.

"You have proved that he can," she answered. "But you have not missed everything, my dear. You are a very great man, and a man with a great work in the world. Many men have gone along the path you took, but few have found the strength to turn back as you have done."

"Joan, I want to tell you something. I was engaged to be married once—years ago. She ran away on the evening before our marriage day. It was the beginning of my downfall. I thought I loved her."

His face was haggard. Divining his distress, Joan slipped her hand into his.

"Joan, dearest," said Lancaster after a pause, "I have often thought that some day I would tell you all the wretched story of the past. But I have been thinking differently today. I was entrapped by an unscrupulous man, who robbed me of everything that made life worth living. But there is nothing that would make me afraid to look my fellow men in the face. It is myself whom I have shamed and humiliated. Joan, I want to say nothing, not because I would keep anything from you, but because I want to start my life anew. I shall never go back to the institute."

"You mean, dear—?"

"Never. I shall not return tomorrow. I want you to come to the Southwest with me, Joan, my dear. We will drive across the hills to Carroll's and catch the through train there. I shall begin to live the new life you have given me. Will you leave everything for my sake, Joan? Is it too hard a request?"

"It is not too hard," she answered. "But it is not right for you."

"It is right for me to leave a living death behind me."

"No, dear. It is running away. You spoke to me of some harder fight to be fought."

"With nothing to win, Joan—nothing. When I leave here no human being will miss or regret me."

"There is your work at Avonmouth. There is the hospital which you have made famous throughout the United States. Your work is there, not in some obscure place where it would be of less use to the world and no example. Besides, consider that if you become famous again, as you must, you will be discovered. And one can never leave his past behind him. That follows everywhere."

"Yes, that is true," muttered Lancaster, staring out over the darkening hills. "Well, I leave it to you, my dear, but to go back to fight out a futile battle seems to me now something unendurable."

"You must go back to the institute, and then to Avonmouth, and meet your enemies, John," she said. "I shall be at your side. Nothing will make me afraid, or weaken my love for you."

His face twitched. "Not if I tell you things which prove me worthless of your love?" he asked. "Not if you find I am an outcast man who has deserved his misfortunes?"

She only smiled at him. "I shall not judge you by your words," she said, "nor yet by other men's opinions, but my knowledge of you."

"Then I shall tell you everything," he answered, drawing Joan's hand into his. "Everything, but not here. Here I shall keep the peace of the hills within my heart, and you."

So they strolled back toward the cabin, and Joan's drab-colored life was transmuted in this, her first love, to gold. She lived in her lover, she trusted wholly in him who had brought love to her, not like a conquering god, but in the simplest guise, making it the unfolding of her own loving nature. She gave her youth, her innocence as love's price, and thought the exchange her profit. There was never such peacefulness in any place as there that evening, and in Joan's heart was abounding peace likewise.

When they reached the cabin the patient was better. Lancaster spent the evening giving detailed instructions to the man's wife.

"I shall do my best to come again if I am needed," he said. "But I can't promise. I may be called to Avonmouth at any moment. Keep him quiet, for heaven's sake keep him absolutely motionless for a week, and then let him sit up if he wants to. And nothing to eat but the schedule I am making out for you."

Afterward Joan told Lancaster that she wished to stay for a few days to take care of the man. But Lancaster would not hear of it.

"These hill people never die," he said. "He'll be up and about before the week is over."

"But the diet?"

"They'll feed him on soda biscuits as soon as he's well enough to eat anything. Fortunately he won't be able to eat for a week, so he won't come to any harm. I shall send Jenkins over two or three times to report progress."

Joan's room was a tiny place under the eaves. She spent a sleepless, happy night there, thinking over the happiness that had come to her. It was strange and wonderful to lie awake under the same roof that sheltered Lancaster, and to reflect how soon their lives would flow together, calmly, in their own country. She could not have wished any happier fate in life.

With her limited experience, it seemed ideal that, after the years of stress in Avonmouth, she should be returning, almost to her own home, a wife. She had puzzled sometimes over Lancaster's long residences in the place that bore his name. But she dreamed of the time when he would give up his work at Avonmouth and retire to a new institute, a spacious home where they could fill their wards with the country people, where her life's vocation and her life's happiness would be united.

At last she fell asleep, and, when she awoke, Lancaster was tapping at her door.

"Time to get up, Joan!" he called cheerfully.

She sprang out of bed. "How is the patient?" she asked.

"Doing finely and wants to go to work," said Lancaster, laughing.

Joan dressed in a hurry and ran downstairs. Lancaster was waiting on the porch. She raised her face for his kiss, already natural to her, already the happy fulfillment of her innocent dreams of love. Then, arm in arm, they strolled out into the sunlight.

The glorious light lay on every hill. In that light all the shadows of the past seemed to shrivel away.

"We are going back to the institute this morning, Joan," said Lancaster.

Franklin Set Style

When Eighteenth-century Paris was still wearing the picturesque three-cornered hat Benjamin Franklin came to represent the new republic of the United States, wearing on his head a queer thing derived from the steeple crowns of the Puritan Pilgrim fathers. Paris copied it and turned it into the cylinder which Christendom has worn ever since, says the Detroit News.

In the Eighteenth century when partisans of France and of Russia were fighting it out in Sweden the French faction wore hats, the Russians caps. The Middle ages, as a familiar ballad reminds us, knew a Pilgrim by his "cockle hat."

"Cold Light" Developed

Camille Dussard, the French scientist, has developed "cold light" to the place where he could touch the wires of his 2-000-candle-power electric lamp and receive neither electric shock nor the effect of heat. He explains that in the ordinary lamp today only one watt in every 100 watts gives light, the remainder giving heat. He believes it possible to build a light of 10,000 candle-power that will give off no heat.

STRENGTH IN RESERVE

Nation's Financial Resources Mobilized for General Good When Need Comes.

There are more than thirty thousand banks in the United States, largely owned by residents of the cities, towns and villages in which they operate. They receive deposits of coin, currency or credits for the current use of business and for safekeeping, and they loan out these funds at interest to proper and profitable business enterprises, agricultural, industrial or commercial, always bearing in mind the necessity of having on hand, or quickly available, sufficient funds to meet the demands of such customers as desire to make withdrawals.

To meet the demands of such customers and others upon the funds in their care bankers must maintain reserves—in their vaults, on deposit with other banks, invested in securities which command a ready market, or it may be in the form of call loans, payment of which they can demand at will.

Before the establishment of the Federal Reserve System—in 1907, in 1896, in 1873 and many times before—the banks of the nation were unable to assist each other when panic threatened. There was no provision for effective leadership, and co-operative action was out of the question. Bank reserves, carried with other banks which were no less embarrassed, were least available when they were needed most.

Every country bank had reserves in one or more of the larger cities in its section as well as in the great centers of population, and since the correspondent banks paid interest on such deposits they were compelled to loan them out, usually at call. Whenever panic or the growing fear of it led any bank to draw upon its reserves—and panic usually led every bank to do so—the correspondent, in order to meet such demands, was compelled to withdraw the money from active service and the thousands of such withdrawals, aggregating many millions of dollars, only made the general situation worse by restricting essential business operations and in many cases compelling the sale of securities, perhaps at grievous loss.

The direct result in more than one instance was a complete breakdown of the country's banking machinery and a prolonged period of resultant depression in industry and commerce.

The great achievement of the Federal Reserve System has been the massing of the nation's monetary armies. By this means it has rendered financial panic impossible in America and has eliminated the worst features of business depression.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON BEING A SMALL INVESTOR

"It seems to me, Aunt Emmy," said Jane, "that it is rather silly for us to be talking about investments when all we can save is about $500 a year after all our expenses and life insurance are paid."

"You're wrong there. If you save $500 a year you are doing very well indeed, and remember that the insurance you speak of is in the nature of an investment itself."

"Well, I know, Aunty, but somehow investments always seem to mean dealing in lots of money, thousands and thousands of dollars. There certainly can't be many good securities which people with so little money as we have could buy."

"Indeed, there are a number of good investments for the small investor," said Aunt Emmy. "Even if you could only set aside five or ten dollars a month you can be sure of one investment that you can safely make on your own responsibility and that is putting your money in a savings bank, the safest and most conservative way of making it work for you. Even though the interest will be moderate, you will feel safe. Then there are other securities you can buy, but don't buy any before getting sound advice from some trust company or bank. These investments are real estate mortgages, industrial corporation securities, public utility corporation securities, government securities—any one of these securities may be bought on the installment plan. You may pay as little as five dollars a month for them or as much as you want to invest.

"Of course you can never be actually positive that an investment will turn out well. Human affairs are uncertain at best. When you invest money, what you really do is entrust your money to business men to use in a paying business. If your bank gives a good account of the corporation whose securities you desire to buy you are comparatively safe. But never use a cent of your capital for speculation. No matter who comes to you and tells you that a certain stock is going up, that it is a sure thing, don't speculate on it. Speculating in stocks is not for our kind. You'd never believe it, but some people who are supposed to have common sense will mortgage their homes and ruin themselves in wild speculations. The best thing for you is to buy securities on monthly payments."

"Can you do that, Aunt Emmy?"

"Certainly, and if you start to do it you'll soon find that you'll be willing to do without lots of little catch-penny things for the sake of owning a nice comfortable bond."—Anne B. Aymes.

She nodded happily. "I am ashamed to feel so gay when you are unhappy," she said.

"I am not unhappy, Joan," he answered. "I thought over everything last night, and I see now that you were right. I shall go back. Of course I shall go back. I shall regain what I have lost, and I shall face my enemies and beat them."

At ten o'clock the horse was harnessed and the drive back began.

At first Joan, seated at her lover's side, breathed in the mountain air, the sense of freedom, the scent of the pines, the joy of the sunlight. Then the peaks began to tower above them. The dulled valley air struck something from her joy but not too much for her to dream. She looked fondly at Lancaster, who drew her hand into his.

"I am going back to win," he said again.

Later the sun went into clouds. The air grew moister, the hills inclosed them, the familiar landmarks began to reappear. And now something of Lancaster's despondency of the evening before came over Joan. And again, as if sensing her mood, he reiterated:

"I am going back to fight and win, my dear."

But when the institute came into sight at last, the long, gaunt building cast its chill over the girl's heart. In contrast with the mountain village Lancaster was depressing and lonely. And Joan was conscious of one gripping fear Suppose that Myers had returned!

She understood now how Lancaster had felt the evening before when he said he would never go back. It was like plunging out of the sunlight into a dark mountain pool.

The matron came forward as the buggy stopped. Joan looked at her in terror. But her face was placid enough, and she was able to read in it the secretary's continued absence.

"Dr. Lancaster, there was a telephone message for you a few minutes ago from Avonmouth," she said.

Lancaster leaped from the buggy and helped Joan down. "I'll be with you in a few moments," he said, throwing the reins over the hitching post.

He went into the house. His step was firm, his demeanor unruffled; the matron, who followed him, seemed undisturbed. But already everything was changed. The black shadow of Myers seemed to loom up until it overspread the institute again. Joan paced the porch in fear which gathered strength each moment that Lancaster failed to return. When at last she saw him coming her suspense was unbearable.

She looked at him in mute fear as he laid his hand carelessly upon her shoulder.

"I have to go to Avonmouth at once," he said. "I have no choice in the matter. It is a patient who must undergo an operation—my operation—within twelve hours. It is fortunate that we have the buggy, because I shall just have time to catch the afternoon train and get into Avonmouth at midnight."

Then he looked at her white face and read the fear in it. "If you tell me to stay, I'll say," he said.

"And the patient?" whispered Joan.

"Will die. No, of course I shall go. Nothing could keep me from going, not even you, my dear. But you would not have me stay."

"You are right. Yes, of course you must go. But I am afraid," said Joan. "I am afraid of Myers."

He started, as if he, too, had been thinking of the secretary. "But the man can't harm me, dear," he said.

"The message came from him!" cried Joan in fear.

Lancaster looked away. But, when she repeated the question he answered, "No."

"He is at Avonmouth. Is he not there?" she asked.

"Well, Joan, I think he is," said Lancaster reluctantly. "But he may not be. I only know that the message was not from him."

"It was not from the hospital? Not from MacPherson?"

"It was from a man connected with the hospital," said Lancaster. "But it was not from MacPherson and not from Myers, and it did not mention Myers' name. Why, my dear, you mustn't give way to nerves now that I am losing mine. It is a simple request for me to operate tomorrow."

She pulled herself together. "Of course you must go, John," she said again. She put her arms about his neck. "Dear, if you should see that man, you will not fall into any trap that he may set for you?" she asked. "You are so strong, you will not let him trample on you? You are yourself again, and you will remain so for my sake?"

"Never fear!" he answered cheerfully. "I am not going to take morphine again. Why, I shall have none with me, my dear Joan, and I should have no opportunity to buy any, even if I wanted to. I shall operate perhaps as soon as I reach the hospital, and return on the morning train. I was not even go to my house at all."

"I am not afraid that you will take morphine," said Joan. "But you will not see Myers?"

"Not if I can help it. He can't come to the hospital, and I don't think he will dare to lie in wait for me at the station. If he does, he'll find me a tough customer to kidnap in broad daylight. There, my dear, be calm and sensible, and when I return I shall tell you everything that you must know."

He kissed her and hurried in to pack his suitcase. He came out in a few moments and placed it in the buggy. "Good-by, Joan, dearest Joan," he said. "And you will not hint at our engagement to Mrs. Fraser while I am gone? I have very special reasons for this."

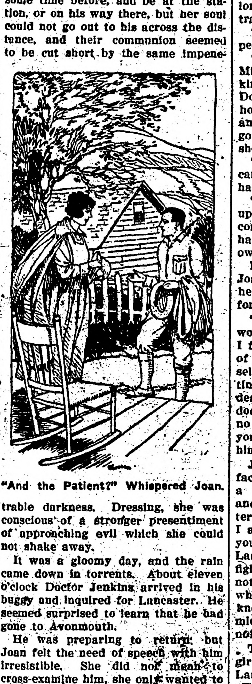
She shook her head and laughed, and returned his kiss, and all the while her heart grew heavier. And long after the buggy had disappeared from sight she stood upon the porch looking after it.

Chapter IX

That night was sleepless as the last, but all the joy that had filled her heart in the hill cabin was gone. She lay awake, listening to the rain that pattered on the roof, thinking and wondering. How strange her life had become, and how far away the old landmarks were! She had fought for a man's soul in darkness and snatched it into light, and now the darkness seemed closing about her again. And she could only hope and wait through endless hours.

In vain she tried to tell herself that it was only an ordinary summons. On the face of it, the call was natural; but Joan's instinct told her that there was more behind it. Myers had not surrendered his prey so easily as he had assumed to do. And Lancaster had been evasive—to spare her, perhaps, but evasive. And her task now was only to wait.

At eight she rose. She imagined that he must have finished the operation some time before, and be at the station, or on his way there, but her soul could not go out to his across the distance, and their communion seemed to be cut short by the same impenetrable darkness. Dressing, she was conscious of a stronger presentiment of approaching evil which she could not shake away.



"And the Patient?" Whispered Joan.

It was a gloomy day, and the rain came down in torrents. About eleven o'clock Doctor Jenkins arrived in his buggy and inquired for Lancaster. He seemed surprised to learn that he had gone to Avonmouth.

He was preparing to return; but Joan felt the need of speech with him irresistible. She did not mean to cross-examine him, she only wanted to shake off the feeling that Lancaster had passed out of her reach by speaking to one of his associates. She hardly knew the purpose of her accosting Jenkins until she saw the look of concern upon his face.

"Miss Wentworth, you aren't well!" he exclaimed. "You have been overdoing it!"

"No, Doctor Jenkins, but—Doctor Lancaster has gone into Avonmouth—"

"Yes, Miss Wentworth. But he won't come to any harm there, thanks to you. You've taught me a thing or two about morphine patients. Miss Wentworth," he went on, in his polite, complimentary fashion. "I never saw anyone get well as fast as Doctor Lancaster, nor any nurse that could handle a situation as you did," he added.

"Yes, but it was not really morphine, you know," said Joan, and then she almost gaped in astonishment. What had she said? Why had she said it?

Doctor Jenkins was staring at her too. "Not morphine, you say, Miss Wentworth?" he stammered.

"I mean, the symptoms weren't those of morphine poisoning," said Joan.

"Oh, well, Miss Wentworth, everybody takes it in a different way," he answered. "Yes, I reckon it was morphine right enough. They wouldn't put the wrong label on the bottles. You certainly did set things humming, Miss Wentworth," he added, laughing and raising his hat.

"Wait a moment, Doctor Jenkins," persisted Joan. "I am so anxious about the doctor. He ought not to have gone; he was in no condition to go, and yet a man's life is at stake."

The doctor's face became at once impenetrable. He seemed to be on his guard against her. He seemed to know more than she, Doctor Lancaster's fiancee, knew; it was humiliating and ironical, but Joan saw that to question him, even if she had been so minded, was useless.

She was not minded. That would be a disloyal act toward her lover. Soon she would know; and meanwhile she kept down her fears. She watched Jenkins drive away with sinking heart. And somehow the morning passed.

The hours of afternoon were leaden ones. Five o'clock came at last, with no cessation of the downpour, and Joan went out and paced the rain-soaked veranda endlessly, looking anxiously in the direction of the station, though she knew that it must be at least two hours before she could hope to see Jenkins' buggy again on its way up the hill.

Through the lowering western clouds the sun, emerging for a moment, streaked the west with angry crimson splashes. Lancaster must be nearly home. But it was no use waiting there, where her fears grew from moment to moment. She went into the building, and saw the matron standing within her door. Suddenly she sensed the reflection of her own fears in Mrs. Fraser's heart; she knew the woman was doing nothing as she stood there, was waiting, like herself, and, in the same manner, hoping against hope for the doctor's safe return. Impulsively Joan entered the room. She could keep silence no longer. She broke down, sobbing distractedly.

"I am afraid something has happened to the doctor," she wept.

"Now you sit down in that chair, Miss Wentworth," said Mrs. Fraser kindly. "It's been a trying day. But Doctor Lancaster will be home in an hour, and there's no use becoming anxious about him. Heavens, if we got anxious before we had cause, what should we do?"

"I know," sobbed the girl. "But I can't bear waiting. I know something has happened to him."

"Now, my dear, you are all worked up about him," she said. "He won't come to any harm. He can't come to harm when he went straight to his own hospital," she added.

But she spoke without conviction. Joan's hysterical mood was infecting her, increasing her own fears and forebodings.

"I reckon you know, Miss Wentworth, how much Doctor Jenkins and I feel we owe to you for taking care of the doctor," she said, seating herself at the girl's side. "And for getting that man out of the place, my dear. Man? He's a devil—he's the doctor's devil, Miss Wentworth. And no harm can come to the doctor with you watching for him and praying for him."

Joan looked up at her with troubled face. "Mrs. Fraser, I am so much at a loss," she said. "Doctor Jenkins and you have known Doctor Lancaster so long, and I am a stranger here. I am like a child in comparison with you, so far as knowledge of Doctor Lancaster is concerned. I have been fighting his physical troubles, and I do not know his mental ones. That is what puts me at a loss. How can I know that Doctor Lancaster's enemies are not waiting for him, or have not hurt him?"

The matron placed her hand on the girl's knee. "Why, my dear, Doctor Lancaster has no enemies," she said. "How could such a splendid man have enemies? Of course there are troubles; who hasn't them? And it may be there's things that Doctor Jenkins and I don't know—I've thought there might be. But we've only been here three years, and that was long after the doctor's troubles began. And of course we never listened to the village gossip. But oh, Miss Wentworth, you can't imagine the sorrow in our hearts when we saw that splendid man giving way to his habit and letting it creep over him little by little and gain the mastery.

"News" in "Newport News"

The origin of the name of the city of Newport News is uncertain. It is believed to be derived from two proper names—Newport and Newce. Captain Newport commanded the first vessel to bring immigrants to Virginia and William Newce was one of the early treasurers of the colony. John Smith wrote the latter name "Nuse."

SICK 3 YEARS WITHOUT RELIEF

Finally Found Health by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Columbia, S. C.—"Your medicine has done me so much good that I feel like I owe my life to it. For three years I was sick and was treated by physicians, but they didn't seem to help me any. Then I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and got strong enough to do my housework, where before I was hardly able to be up. I have also taken the Vegetable Compound during the Change of Life and it has left me in good health. I recommend it as the best medicine for women in the Change of Life and you can use these facts as a testimonial."—Mrs. S. A. HOLLEY, R. F. D. No. 4, Columbia, South Carolina.

Why suffer for years with backache, nervousness, painful times and other ailments common to women from early life to middle age, when Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will bring relief? Take it when annoying symptoms first appear and avoid years of suffering.

In a recent country-wide canvass of purchasers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound over 200,000 replies were received, and 98 out of every 100 reported they were benefited by its use.

CURED HIS RHEUMATISM!

"I am eighty-three years old and I doctored for rheumatism ever since I came out of the army, over 50 years ago. Like many others, I spent money freely for so-called 'cures' and I have read about 'Uric Acid' until I could almost taste it. I could not sleep nights or walk without pain; my hands were so sore and stiff I could not hold a pen. But now I am again in active business and can walk with ease or write all day with comfort. Friends are surprised at the change." You might just as well attempt to put out a fire with oil as try to get rid of your rheumatism, neuritis and like complaints by taking treatment supposed to drive Uric Acid out of your blood and body. It took Mr. Ashelman fifty years to find out the truth. He learned how to get rid of the true cause of his rheumatism, other disorders, and recover his strength from "The Inner Mysteries," now being distributed free by an authority who devoted over twenty years to the scientific study of this trouble. If any reader of this paper wishes "The Inner Mysteries of Rheumatism" overlooked by doctors and scientists for centuries past, simply send a post card or letter to H. P. Clearwater, No. 1396 A Street, Hallowell, Maine. Send now, lest you forget! If not a sufferer, cut out this notice and hand this good news and opportunity to some afflicted friend. All who send will receive it by return mail without any charge whatever.

You Can Quickly Limber Up Sore, Stiff, Swollen Joints

It's here, right in town and every live druggist has it.

It's a low price remedy, to be sure, but that doesn't stop it from taking the kinks, lameness or torture out of your troubled joints.

Joint-Ease is the name, so-called because it is compounded solely for the purpose of relieving all joint ailments.

Just rub it on the tormented, lame joints and in just a few seconds it will penetrate through skin and flesh right down to the tendons and ligaments of the joints—right where the trouble starts—then blessed comfort comes quickly.

It absorbs instantly and is so clean and stainless that you can rub it on often and get thereby, results much more quickly, when the joint is inflamed and the agony intense.

Being such a powerful counter irritant, it cannot help bringing speedy and helpful results in congestion, sore throat, chest colds, lumbago and neuralgia much quicker than almost any remedy you can buy.

But you must remember that it is for joint afflictions that it is mostly dispensed and its helpfulness will astonish you after all ordinary liniments and other treatments have failed.

Always remember, when Joint-Ease gets in joint agony gets out—quick.

Health and good looks —the reward of internal cleanliness.

IF YOU do not keep clean internally your looks and health are undermined together. A clogged intestine breeds poisons that reach every part of the body. These poisons ruin the complexion and undermine health. Constipation brings on such ailments as headaches, bilious attacks and insomnia, each of which saps your health and vitality.

Avoid Laxatives—say Doctors

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition.

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

Foreign

Riga—With the new Latvian and Esthonian cabinets getting into stride, and the governments of the Baltic states apparently stable, the Helsingfors Baltic states conference is definitely set for January 17. All the foreign ministers of the Baltic states have signified their intention of attending. It is probable that Poland's proposed arbitration treaty will be signed.

Paris—Former Empress Zita of Austria-Hungary has appealed to the Ambassadors' council for permission to return to Hungary with Crown Prince Otto and the rest of her family, to reside on the crown domain at Godollo, according to a special dispatch from Budapest. She asserts that it is necessary that Otto should be in Hungary when the king is chosen and adds that the peace treaty does not forbid his return.

Calcutta—It is understood that Rajah Sir Hari Singh, named as the victim in the recent London Robinson blackmailing case, has been asked bp the government to go to England in connection with legal proceedings against the alleged instigators of the plot. It was stated that the wealthy Indian price was not willing to go and would do so only in the event that his presence was an absolute necessity.

Sydney—Wheat for January shipment has reached 6 shillings a bushel at country railway stations, the highest received by the growers in more than 20 years except one year when the labor ministry guaranteed the farmers a high price for electioneering purposes. The harvesting is proceeding smoothly in most parts of Australia. New South Wales' yield is expected to reach 60,000,000 bushels and the yield for all Australia will be 160,000,000 bushels, with an exportable surplus of 120,000,000 bushels.

Sofia, Bulgaria—Premier Tzankov has returned from a visit to Belgrade and Bucharest. Concerning his trip, the premier said: "My purpose in visiting the two capitals was to establish personal contact with the authorities and devise means for action for the common interests of Bulgaria, Jugoslavia and Rumania. Many questions affecting the common problems of the three states were discussed at a series of conferences. I hope the interchange of views will culminate in co-operation between them to promote the interests of the Balkan states.

London—New York in all probability will see Princess Mary the coming year. With Lord Lascelles she is going to visit Canada informally and hopes to visit New York before she returns to England.

Adelaide, Australia—A riot, which at one time threatened to become serious, broke out here after a meeting of workmen, called to express disapproval of the type of immigrants coming to Australia. At one stage of the disturbance the rioters numbered about 500, most of them foreigners. The police quickly took hold of the situation and restored order.

Lightning Photographed

Photography determines the distance of a lightning flash, and hence the dimensions of any of its features. Two cameras are mounted side by side and exposed at the same time, says Nature Magazine. Objects of known distance from the point of observation are photographed along with the lightning, and a comparison of the two pictures, plus a little mathematics, gives the distance of the lightning much more exactly than the old process of counting seconds between the flash and the thunder.

Allays irritation, soothes and heals throat and lung inflammation. The constant irritation of a cough keeps the delicate mucus membrane of the throat and lungs in a congested condition, which BOSCHEE'S SYRUP gently and quickly heals. For this reason it has been a favorite household remedy for colds, coughs, bronchitis and especially for lung troubles in millions of homes all over the world for the last fifty-eight years, enabling the patient to obtain a good night's rest, free from coughing with easy expectoration in the morning. You can buy BOSCHEE'S SYRUP wherever medicines are sold.—Adv.

Originally "Jaws' Harp"

The name, jew's-harp, is probably a corruption of the original name of this simple musical instrument, jaws' harp, so called because when in use it is held between the jaws. A musician named Charles Eulenstein produced remarkable effects with jew's-harps at the Royal Institute, London, on February 15, 1828.

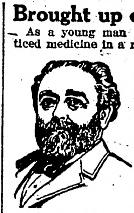
Brought up on a Farm



As a young man Dr. Pierce practiced medicine in a rural district and was known far and wide for his great success in alleviating disease. He early moved to Buffalo and put up in ready-to-use form, his Golden Medical Discovery, the well-known tonic for the blood, which is an extract of native roots. This "Discovery" of Dr. Pierce's clears away pimples and annoying eruptions, tends to keep the complexion fresh and clear. It corrects the disordered conditions in a sick stomach, aids digestion, acts as a tonic and enriches the blood. Vim is sure to follow its use. All dealers. Tablets or liquid.

Don't wait for time to heal that itching rash

NEGLECT of even the slightest skin rash, roughness, chafing or soreness may have serious consequences. Painful, disfiguring complaints like eczema, ringworm, etc., all start in a small way.

The safest plan is to keep a jar of Resinol Ointment ready to use at the first sign of skin trouble. It promptly stops itching and reduces inflammation and burning. The tiny pores readily receive this soothing ointment, and its healing influence is carried far below the surface of the skin.

Resinol Soap is a favorite with thousands who like its generous lather, so refreshing and cleansing. At all druggists.

STEPPING AHEAD OF THE BANK CROOK

Bankers Association Official Gives Rules to Foil Criminals and Avoid Loss.

By JAMES E. BAUM,
Manager Protective Department
American Bankers Association

The direct cost of all crimes in this country has now reached its highest peak. Statistics reveal startling increases in nearly every type of crime during the past ten years. The total financial loss through the operations of criminals is estimated at more than $3,500,000,000 for this year. A few of the items follow:

Embezzlement	$ 120.000.000
Credit frauds	400.000.000
Burglary, larceny, and petty thefts	250.000.000
Forgery, including worthless and bogus checks	100.000.000
Seaport robberies, piracies and customs frauds	100.000.000
Railroad thefts	25.000.000
Stock frauds	1.700.000.000
Insurance frauds	1.000.000.000
Arson	50.000.000
Miscellaneous	75.000.000

I am giving cold figures, not to startle any one unless it be toward more extreme care in handling and safeguarding funds and valuables. Right here let me quote rules to help foil criminals known as "check passers" or "scratchers"; they will help you to avoid serious loss:

1. Never write checks with a pencil. Use pen and ink or, if possible, a check protector.
2. Fill in all blank spaces.
3. Don't erase. Errors should be corrected by writing a new check and destroying those incorrectly written.
4. Never give a blank check to a stranger and never cash a stranger's check without an indorsement which you have positively verified.
5. Make checks payable to "cash" or "bearer" only when your personally present them at your bank. Otherwise use the name of the person you intend shall receive payment.
6. Never place your signature alone as an indorsement on checks you intend to deposit. Write above or below your signature the words "For deposit only."
7. Never sign blank checks. If you expect to be absent any length of time open a separate account subject to check of your employee or agent.
8. Guard your cancelled vouchers as you would a valid check, leaving none where they may be easily taken.
9. Keep your check books securely locked up and be careful how and where you sign or exhibit your signature.
10. Beware of the magic of the word "certified." Ordinary certification stamps can be duplicated almost as easily as any other rubber stamp.
11. Watch checks which apparently bear the makers' "O. K." or other form of approval. They are more easily forged than the full signature.
12. Safeguard your checks as you would your money, for they represent money.
13. Deposit slips provide space for your name, usually upon the upper lines. Those written incorrectly should be destroyed as otherwise your signature will be available for fraudulent use. You can prevent loss by first writing the detail of amounts deposited and then printing your account name.

The bankers' campaign for everybody to "pay by check" has borne fruit. It has been estimated that today more than 95 per cent. of the business of the U. S. is transacted by the use of checks or other credit instruments. That means about six and one-half billion checks will be written by bank depositors in this country during 1924 and they will total about $500,000,000,000 in amount, or one hundred times the money in circulation.

Banks War on Crooks

The average bank depositor when queried as to what his bank does to protect his deposits, will probably tell you they are kept in a great vault and that armed watchmen are employed, as well as an elaborate and efficient burglary and robbery alarm system. He may not know that the 23,000 banks comprising the American Bankers Association have constantly and conveniently available an army of highly trained specialists who wage a continuous and relentless warfare against the bank criminal. These operatives are within easy reach of any member bank. Criminals know that if they attack a member bank they are attacking one of the most powerful and effective protective organizations in existence.

Another medium by which bankers prevent many financial crimes or losses is the warnings continually broadcast from the American Bankers Association and forty-eight state bankers associations. These warnings keep the trap constantly set and carry out the Association's plan of crime prevention as contrasted with detection.

Danger Ahead

American farmers should not increase their wheat acreage for 1924. If they increase the acreage by three million acres, as is indicated by the intentions to Seed Wheat Survey of the government, and normal conditions again prevail in other wheat producing countries, next year's wheat market will be glutted and once more wheat prices will be ruinously low. The present high price of wheat is due to poor crops in other countries and in certain sections of the United States.—W. M. Jardine, Advisory Council, Agricultural Commission, American Bankers Association.

Where Bankers Come From

The smaller localities are to a large extent the recruiting ground for the profession of banking. A recent survey discloses the fact that of 682 senior bank officers in the largest cities of the United States, 406, or 60 per cent, were born in the country or in small towns.

Of the 682 senior bankers of large cities, 427, or approximately 62 per cent, had a high school or college education. The conclusion is reasonable that the smaller environment, coupled with an education, makes for success in the banking field.—American Bankers Association Journal.

—14—

"At first, when I came here, it was only at times that he'd take the morphine, and then he'd have terrible outbursts of rage, and his mind would go, especially when he'd have those fits after he came back from Avonmouth. But after that the boodoo got him. That was when I was afraid."

"The boodoo?" inquired Joan.

"Miss Wentworth, the devil who was at him so long got hold of him once or twice. I've seen him come back from Avonmouth a different man, Miss Wentworth. That's when I've been afraid. Because the devil that can kill the body isn't much of a devil, but when he kills the soul there is no help but prayer. When he's in those dreadful moods he's another man. He's a wicked man, Miss Wentworth, and I'd shoot him then, if he tried to harm me or any of mine, and I wouldn't think I'd killed Doctor Lancaster. It all began after they accused him of stealing the trust funds."

"It is not true," said Joan.

"I'm sure it isn't, Miss Wentworth. But you see old Doctor Lancaster didn't leave the charge of the fund to his son; he left it in the care of the trustees. And there were complications about the hospital at Avonmouth. And then, after the doctor's bride ran away on the eve of their marriage it changed all his nature."

"I have heard of that," said Joan quietly. "But we must not discuss that in the doctor's absence."

"Why, everybody knows about that, Miss Wentworth. Before it happened they say the doctor was the most respected man in Lancaster. He'd been born here, you know, on the plantation down in the valley Millville way. She was a Miss Reid. She came from Farnley county. She was the reigning belle there, admired and flattered, and it turned her heart to a stone to have all the men after her, crazy to marry her. The doctor was a young man then, and he couldn't see any further into her heart, such as it was, than the rest of them.

"She led the doctor a chase before she promised him, they say. But the very day before their marriage was to have been she left her home without a word to anyone, to go off with another man who's never been discovered. That broke the doctor up. He took to drugs then, they tell me. The Institute had been a big place before; it stood over on Morley's hill, but it burned down one night, and we took this old farm house. And the doctor was using the funds, they said, and wasn't responsible at all.

"The trustees found that the money was gone. Nobody knew where it went, because the doctor had his own inheritance, and he wasn't the man to steal or squander. They wouldn't do anything to him, because of his family, but they put Mr. Myers in charge of the finances. That's all. None of us liked him, but what could we do about it? He was here when Doctor Jenkins and I were appointed, and as soon as we understood how matters were we agreed to stay as long as we could and try to help the doctor."

"Mrs. Fraser, I want to know why Mr. Myers incited Doctor Lancaster to use morphine," said Joan.

"Miss Wentworth—"

"You know he did. You told me so. And Doctor Jenkins knows."

The matron looked agitated. "What could we do?" she cried. "Suppose we knew, what can two people do against a man like Myers? Suppose we had said so, who would have believed us? We did all we could do; and we all love the doctor and would rather stay with him and help where we could than be discharged and do nothing."

She looked at Joan piteously, like a child caught in wrong-doing.

"I know you did your best," answered the girl. "But why should Doctor Lancaster stay here in Myers' power, instead of at his home in Avonmouth, where he is respected and powerful? Nothing of all this is known there."

The matron wrung her hands. "I don't know," she answered. "I suppose that man has had him by the throat in more ways than we know. Whenever the doctor used to go to Avonmouth Mr. Myers would go with him, and generally he'd come back with him. Miss Wentworth, till you came here the doctor wasn't a man; what with his drugs and the hold Mr. Myers had over him, he was just a machine. And Mr. Myers was the driver."

Joan had the feeling that she should not listen to the matron's talk about Lancaster; it seemed disloyal of her; but she felt, too, that she must know more, and speedily, if she was to thwart that menacing evil which she sensed more and more clearly as the moments passed.

"Miss Wentworth," said the matron, placing her hand on the girl's arm firmly, "there's something else I ought to have told you about. Mrs. Dana—"

"Hark!" interrupted Joan, holding up her hand for silence.

Then they heard, a long distance away, and inaudible to one whose attention was not strained, like theirs, the sound of the wheels of Jenkins' buggy.

Chapter X

Joan hurried out upon the veranda and stood peering under her raised hand across the rain-swamped fields to where the carriage road wound in and out among the hills. The sun had set, and it was beginning to grow dusk; a bat was flitting under the eaves, and the steady downpour never ceased. Mrs. Fraser, who had moved to follow the girl, went back into her room. There was a queer, troubled pucker about her lips, and once she went to the door and looked intently at Joan, who had not stirred from her position of expectancy.

Presently, looking out through the dripping trees, Joan could see the buggy crawling up the hill through the mud. Slowly it moved along the road. Jenkins was driving, and there were two men with him, not one. Joan recognized Lancaster; then she perceived, first the hard hat, next Myers' face under it.

She shuddered. The worst had come about, then. But the last battle was joined, and under her fears she felt a hardening of her spiritual resources. She would not falter. She went slowly toward the top of the three low wooden steps, and stood there like a statue, watching the buggy pass up the weed-grown drive until it came to a standstill.

Lancaster and Myers were laughing together, and, as Myers saw the girl, he said something, and the other threw back his head in merriment.

Myers was the first to descend. He raised his hat to Joan and grinned. "The doctor's come back quite safe, you see," he said, "and feeling fine again."

Joan hardly noticed the man; she was bracing herself to bear what was to come.

Lancaster got out, and Jenkins, contrary to his custom, lashed the horse violently and drove rapidly away. Myers and Lancaster came up the steps of the porch together. Now Lancaster was raising his hat in turn, and under it was the face of the smirking bully of the operating theater at the Avonmouth hospital.

"Well, I had a fine trip to Avonmouth, my dear, and I hurried back as fast as I could, to see you. I couldn't stay away from you very long, Joan, after you saved my life. And I persuaded Mr. Myers to return with me. We're all going to be good friends. Mrs. Fraser! Mrs. Fraser! Where the devil are you?" he bawled.

Mrs. Fraser's frightened face appeared at the door. "Here, sir!" she stammered.

"Is supper ready? If so, we'll all eat together."

"It's waiting, sir. I'll lay another place," said the matron.

"Good! Then we'll go in. What do you say, Joan, darling? Aren't you glad to see me?" he asked, linking his arm in the girl's and advancing his face within a few inches of hers.

With a sob Joan tore herself away from him and ran upstairs at the top of her speed. She was choking with grief and shame. Hard as she ran, she knew her flight was an incentive to Lancaster to follow her. He went after her as fast as he could, and, as she slammed the door of her room, his hand was on the knob outside. She was just too late to turn the key.

"Joan! Joan! Open the door and don't act like a little fool!" he shouted. "What's the matter with you? Ain't you glad I've come back? Say, I've got a half dozen bottles of the fizzy stuff in my bag, and we three will make a night of it."

"Oh, won't you please leave me?" pleaded Joan. "Try to remember how —how different you were yesterday."

"That's true!" he swore. "I'm different now. I was a sanctimonious mug yesterday. I'm in my right mind today. It gave me the blue creeps, being cooped up here in this God-forsaken place. I tell you, Joan, now that I've had enough good liquor to soak that morphine out of my system I'm feeling like a king. Say, now, come down to supper, like a good little girl, and we'll have a great time together. Myers doesn't bear any ill-feeling. And we'll put him out after a while and finish up the bottles ourselves. And say—"

He was advancing toward her with his arms outstretched. Joan sprang back to the washstand and snatched up the half-filled pitcher, with such an evident determination to defend herself with it that the man fell back scowling.

"Joan, don't be a little jackass!" he shouted angrily. "I know what you mean when you look at me like that. You think you're above being jolly and sociable, just because I don't choose to stand on my dignity tonight. Did you expect me to go about always looking like a sanctified mummy, as I did when I was ill?"

"Listen, Doctor Lancaster," panted the girl. "I am not going to judge you by what you are saying now. Leave me, and tomorrow, if you are yourself, I shall be willing to hear your explanation, because I know it is not your better self that is speaking. Leave my room now, please, immediately!"

The man glared at her; but he was dominated, in spite of himself, by her courage and apparent calmness.

"Well, I'm not going to fight with you before I've had my supper," he answered. "You think things over, and in a little while I guess you'll see them in a different light. You can't fool me with those mock airs and graces, dearie. I've seen them in women before. Used to believe in them once, too, till I found it meant that it was going to cost me more in the end. You come down and act straight, Joan—see?"

He slammed the door viciously behind him. Joan fell upon her knees beside her bed. There, tearless, but shaken with her grief, she poured out a wild prayer for the lost soul of the man. This was worse than anything she could have divined. Better by far that he had returned as on that earlier day, drugged and possessed by the morphine spirit than in the chains of this devil. Better that he had died. For Lancaster, even when the shifty, false, lying drug fiend was in control of him, had never been vicious and vile like this before.

And yet this was the John Lancaster of the Southern hospital. It was the traditional Lancaster in his hour of relaxation. He treated women shamefully, as a gossiping nurse had said. Joan had never been in fear of physical harm as she was now. She rose from her knees, looking wildly about her. Then she heard footsteps outside, and she sprang back across the room.

But it was only the matron. Mrs. Fraser cast a scared glance at her and ran forward. "What did he say to you?" she cried.

"I am afraid of him. I dare not stay here. Where shall I go?" cried Joan, losing all self-control.

In the midst of her terror Joan suddenly realized that the look upon the matron's face was the same as on her first night, when they had held a brief conversation in the same room.

For a moment Mrs. Fraser did not answer her. The women drew together, listening. They were having supper below, conversing in boisterous tones and laughing loudly. Joan heard her own name spoken, and a renewed outburst of mirth followed.

"Mrs. Fraser," said Joan, "the Doctor Lancaster whom I respect and honor is not in that man's body. I am going away. I am going at once. I shall ask Doctor Jenkins to protect me until tomorrow. He is a gentleman; he will do so."

"You can't go through this storm," exclaimed the other, and, as she spoke, Joan realized that the wind had risen to a hurricane, and the boughs creaked and snapped like pistol shots. "You must stay here tonight. Stay with me, and I'll swear he shall not hurt you. Look at this!"

She pulled a revolver from beneath her apron and handed it to Joan.

"I've kept that ever since the last time he came back like this, when he went raving among the patients, mad with liquor. That was the end of the institution. He frightened a sick girl almost to death. Use it on him if you must—use it, because it won't be him you'll kill, but the devil that's got him."

She was almost incoherent with fear and excitement. Joan took the revolver and slipped it into the pocket of her uniform. Oddly enough, she felt that the Lancaster of that evening had so grossly wronged the Lancaster of earlier days that to kill him would be to avenge an intolerable outrage. She hated him with all the intensity of which her heart was capable, hated him for the wrong he had done himself, the outrage on their love; and under the hate the flame of the love she had borne burned pure and clear.

It was long since dark, but the maid had not lit the lamp outside Mrs. Dana's door, near the head of the stairs. The moon had not yet risen. The women crept cautiously along the hall.

Lancaster and the secretary were in Myers' room. The door was open. Joan heard a cork fly with a bang, and the gurgle of the champagne in glasses. Their voices were raised high, and there came the sound of a scuffle.

"Sit down!" the secretary was crying. "Do you want to be a fool and spoil everything? Leave her alone until tomorrow."

"I'm d—d if I do!" cried Lancaster.

"Wait a minute! Listen to me! You agreed to come back here and put her out. Why don't you do it now?"

Lancaster laughed coarsely. "Because she's too d—n pretty, Myers," he answered.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Boy Was Right There After Job He Wanted

He was a clean-cut, wide-awake young chap and he wanted a job. "I have nothing at present," said the corporation manager, "but leave your name and if anything turns up you will be notified."

"May I ask if you have made the same promise to many others," said the applicant.

"Yes, quite a few," was the reply. The boy grinned and remarking that it was no monopoly he went out.

A few days later a young man was needed in a hurry and seven telegrams were dispatched to seven waiting applicants. Hardly had these left the secretary's office when in walked Johnny on the Spot, holding his telegram.

"How in the world did you get it?" gasped the executive.

"Well, sir," he answered, "the other day as I was going out I stopped and got a job as errand-boy. I thought it would be a good plan to be where I could get the news quicker than the others."

"You'll do!" said the manager.—Boston Transcript.

The Humble Daisy

Children sometimes remove the white petals from daisies and then use the yellow center as pumpkin pies for their dolls' tables. By clipping off the rays to shape a cap and leaving two long ones for strings, with a little ink, a capped grandmother's head and face are made. In literature the daisy has a place second only to the rose. In church lore the daisy is the flower of St. Margaret.

SEEK CHANGE IN ELECTION LAWS

Governor Christianson Urges Rigid Economy in Inaugural Message.

St. Paul—The Minnesota Legislature began its 90-day session Tuesday, Jan. 7th, when the two houses organized and made ready for their gist of business.

John A. Johnson of Preston was elected speaker of the house of representatives, succeeding W. I. Nolan, three times speaker, who became lieutenant governor and presiding officer of the senate. Mr. Johnson was elected to the speakership over Louis Enstrom of Malung, choice of a farmer-labor caucus.

Senator A. J. Rockne of Zumbrota, was elected president pro tem of the Senate over Henry Arens, of Jordan. Senator Rockne's vote was 48 and Arens 14.

Nomination of Harry J. Acten as secretary to the governor was confirmed by the Senate without the formality of a roll call.

Both houses were organized, the preliminary ceremony and procedure were disposed of in accordance with prearranged programs.

Governor Delivers Inaugural Address

Minnesota's twenty-first governor, Theodore Christianson of Dawson, took his oath of office at noon Wednesday in the House chamber at the State Capital, where members of both houses of the legislature assembled in joint convention for the inaugural ceremonies. The oath was administered by Chief Justice Samuel B. Wilson, after former Governor J. A. O. Preus had delivered his farewell address.

The new governor immediately plunged into a speech urging upon the legislature a drastic economy program. He reiterated his plea for governmental economy in Minnesota and again pledged himself to stand squarely in opposition to any and all waste of public funds.

Consolidation of state departments and activities — the subject of that study—was the keynote of his suggestions, all bearing on economy, some of them far-reaching in their scope.

Would Change Election System.

Two bills proposing sweeping changes in the present election laws of Minnesota are before the House.

One of the bills provides for re-establishing of the Legislature on a partisan basis the same as it was prior to 1913. The other bill would re-establish the party convention system of nominating candidates for all state public offices excepting judiciary and members of the Legislature.

The bill returning the Legislature to a partisan basis is a simple measure which merely calls for the repeal of the clause "members of the state Legislature" from the present law which designates what offices, state, county and local, shall be without party designation.

One bill presented by Senator John C. Sweet would authorize the University of Minnesota to issue certificates of indebtedness for the acquisition of land and the construction of dormitories and other service buildings at the University. The other bill introduced by Senator C. Rosenmeir, would authorize a county board to appropriate money for bridges and approaches within villages and cities of the fourth class under certain circumstances.

BRIEF OUTLINE OF GOV. CHRISTIANSON'S PLANS

Consolidate the 92 boards, bureaus and departments of the state government into a few major departments.

Create a department of administration and financial control so the governor will have power to limit and control expenditures.

Abolish all departments and activities of departments now obsolete.

Authorize no new state activities and create no new state institutions.

Authorize no construction work not absolutely needed.

Create no new state obligations.

Make survey of the state's administrative code to ascertain whether some existing activities can be discontinued.

Extend no form of state aid to local activities, nor accept any new form of federal aid contingent upon state expenditures.

Legislature should refrain from enacting laws which compel local communities to raise their tax levies in order to comply with them, but if such laws are passed they should be permissive rather than mandatory.

Enact law to provide that every bond issue floated by a community must carry with it irrevocable provisions for a tax levy to create a sinking fund sufficient to retire the issue at maturity.

Reduce present schedule of motor vehicle tax licenses sufficient to offset the revenue to be derived from imposition of a gasoline tax.

Enact a gasoline tax law which will provide clearly for exemption of tax on gasoline and oils used for purposes other than propelling motor vehicles on public highways.

Tax bus lines on a gross earnings basis the same as railroads, which pay a 5 per cent tax, and in addition assess bus companies taxes which will cover the wear and tear the vehicles inflict on the highways.

Create what in effect is a "department of conservation," into which would be gathered the offices of the superintendent of lands and timber, the superintendent of mines, the timber board, the forestry board, the state forester, the game and fish commissioner, the drainage commissioner and the commissioner of immigration.

Give liberal support to essentials in education.

Refuse demands for expansion of curricula.

Insist upon higher standards of thoroughness in education from the grades through the University of Minnesota.

MINNESOTA BRIEFS

Elgin—Mr. and Mrs. Aug. Polikowsky, who were wed in Germany in 1864, celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary recently.

Fairmont—Dr. G. W. Dewey of this city has accepted appointment as assistant surgeon at the state soldiers home, Lafayette, Ind.

Arlington—An important business deal was closed here when the Interior Lumber Company sold its yards to the L. P. Dolliff Lumber Company.

Worthington—James H. Tofflemire, 73 years old, a pioneer business man of Jeffers and for eight years postmaster at that place, died at his home.

Chisholm—Although the Chisholm community or memorial building has not been dedicated, the structure is being put in use in every department.

Canby—The world famous herd of registered Hereford cattle owned by Ferguson Bros., including the farm equipment and 900 acres of land was sold recently to the Consolidated Lumber Co., of Manitique, Mich. The herd was composed of 350 head.

Crookston—The biggest land deal consummated in Polk County in several years was closed when Edward Schuster became the owner of the John Barkow farm, adjoining the city limits. The tract contains 135 acres. The price paid was $20,000 approximately $150 an acre.

St. Cloud — With two successful years behind them, farmers of central Minnesota, prominent agriculturists and business men interested in the work of farmers in this part of the state have started work for their third show. The dates agreed on are February 3, 4 and 5.

Breckenridge—Two men who posed as prospective renters of a building through which they were being conducted, bound and tied Joseph Simonits, 55 years old, real estate dealer, robbed him of $7,000 in cash, together with the jewelry he wore, and made their escape.

Mankato—A survey of Mankato industries for the year 1924 shows they reached a total of approximately $25,000,000.

Windom—Promotion work on a new canning factory is being done at this place with the businessmen behind the project.

Bird Island—The Renville County Poultry Show opened at this place with the largest exhibit in the organizations history.

Fairmont—As the result of a "close-up and careful" assessment, 700 more persons will pay personal property taxes in Fairmont this year than last.

St. Paul—Boys' and girls' club work in Minnesota had the best year in 1924 it has ever had, according to the annual report of T. A. Erickson, state club work leader.

Winona—Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Kings of Winona, and their son, Ernest, who are on a big game hunting expedition in British East Africa, bagged three rhinoceros, two buffalo, and two lions Christmas day.

New Ulm—An important step in the good roads program of southwestern Minnesota was taken when the Brown county commissioners, decided to issue bonds to the amount of $250,000 for the rebuilding of the Black and Yellow trail.

St. Paul—Minnesota Legislature began its 90-day session Tuesday, when the two houses organized and made ready for their gist of business. John A. Johnson of Preston was elected speaker of the house.

Minneapolis — A warning against posing as "employment agents" and offering to procure jobs at the new Ford plant for anyone paying a fee was issued by the general manager of the Ford Motor company's Minneapolis assembling plant.

Minneapolis—Mayor George E. Leach threw his hat into the mayoralty ring seeking election for the third time. He will make the race "on his record" which dates back to July, 1921, when he first took office.

Faribault—Creation of a municipal court for Faribault, organization of a state bar incorporated under state laws, and redistricting of the fifth judicial district to have two judges will be sought by Rice county attorneys.

East Grand Forks—Leaving a trail of gold pieces in his wake, the bandit who robbed the Earnest Nelson residence here of $6,000 in postal savings certificates and $880 in cash, including $90 in gold pieces and two gold watches, was arrested in Crookston.

Adrian—When this week's issue of Adrian's newspaper appeared it bad a new name—The Nobles County Review. Thirty-four years ago when John E. King, established the newspaper he gave it the name of the Nobles County Democrat.

St. Paul — Equipped with a comprehensive summary of Northwest sentiment regarding farm conditions, Dean W. C. Coffey, director of the college of agriculture of the University of Minnesota left for Washington to take part, as the Northwest's official spokesman, in President Coolidge's agricultural conference.

Indiana's Superior Frogs

When froggy gets to Quincy market, however, he is fish and sells at present at 40 cents a dozen legs. During the winter, as the supply increases, the cost may drop as low as 15 cents a dozen. Those in the market now come from Maine and from New York state, but the largest and choicest legs, shape not being a consideration in this case, come from the Middle West, particularly Indiana, where the frogs have to jump so far for a drink of water that their hind quarters develop accordingly.—Boston Globe.

Ostracism Old Custom

Ostracism is from the Greek word, ostrakon, a potsherd or shell. It meant a mode of proscription introduced into Athens early in the Sixth century B. C. The people wrote the names of those whom they most suspected upon small shells. These they put in an urn or box and presented to the senate. Upon a scrutiny, he whose name was oftenest written was sentenced by the council to be banished. Six thousand votes were required. The custom was abolished about 300 B. C.

Dolls as Beau Catchers

Among some of the tribes of Mexico years ago the unmarried women carried a doll to tell the world they were on the lookout for a beau and husband. It is a remnant of this custom that is responsible for the doll craze that has been felt in Europe and the United States since the war, it is stated.

WEEKLY MENU SUGGESTIONS

Meal planning to include the entire family will be much easier if some of the general fundamentals of food and their proper proportions are understood.

SUNDAY—Breakfast: Oranges, French toast. Dinner: Stewed chicken, corn on cob, parsley potatoes. Supper: Marmalade, sandwiches, cocoa.

MONDAY—Breakfast: Grapes, poached eggs, toast, coffee. Dinner: Cornish pasty, gelatin with cream. Supper: Baked apples, gingerbread.

TUESDAY—Breakfast: Stewed prunes, oatmeal, top milk. Dinner: Baked sliced ham, baked sweet potatoes. Supper: Chicken soup, stuffed eggs.

WEDNESDAY—Breakfast: Cantaloupe, corn gems. Dinner: Cream of spinach soup, minced meat on toast. Supper: Scalloped rice with tomato.

THURSDAY — Breakfast: Cereal, cream, griddle cakes. Dinner: Broiled steak, Spanish potatoes, horseradish sauce. Supper: Creamed drief beef, baked potatoes.

FRIDAY—Breakfast: Peaches, omelet. Dinner: Codfish chowder, cole slaw. Supper: Oatmeal cookies. lettuce salad.

SATURDAY—Breakfast: Corn flakes, doughnuts, coffee. Dinner: Buttered lima beans, sliced tomatoes, prune pie. Supper: Sardines on toast, canned plums.

Parsley Potatoes.

Take uniform small potatoes, cook until tender, turn into a vegetable dish with enough warmed butter to cover each potato well. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve.

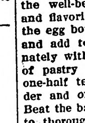
Cornish Pasty.

Line an ordinary pie plate with a rich biscuit dough. Put in a layer of diced round steak with plenty of suet or butter. A pound of meat will make a good-sized pie. Cover with two or three sliced onions, plenty of salt and pepper and a layer of thinly sliced potatoes. Cover with the crust, leaving a vent for the steam to escape, add a teaspoonful of water and bake two hours in a slow oven. When the crust seems done, cover to avoid getting too brown. Remove from the oven, wrap in a cloth and steam for ten minutes before serving.

Horseradish Sauce.

To three tablespoonfuls of grated horseradish, one tablespoonful of vinegar, a little salt and sugar, add one-half cupful of whipped cream. Stir lightly and serve with fish or steak.

GOOD THINGS WE LIKE



A stuffed, well-roasted chicken is a dish fit for a king, yet we like a change occasionally. Let us not forget:

Chicken a la King.—Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter and cook in it one-fourth pound of fresh chopped mushrooms and one-half of a green pepper chopped fine. Cook the stems of the mushrooms first, then add the caps. Melt two-thirds of a tablespoonful of butter, add three tablespoonfuls of flour, cook until well blended, then add two cupfuls of thin cream, one cupful of chicken broth, and stir until boiling; add the mushrooms and pepper and set over hot water. Beat three tablespoonfuls of butter to a cream, add three egg yolks one at a time, one teaspoonful of lemon juice and one-fourth teaspoonful of onion juice and stir in the sauce; then add the meat from a hot cooked chicken, cut into inch-square pieces. Mix thoroughly without breaking the chicken and serve hot with or without toast.

Standard Cake Formula.—A base for all kinds of butter cakes is the following: When adding fruit the flour is increased slightly.

Take one-half cupful of butter, cream well, add one and one-half cupfuls of sugar, cream both together, add the well-beaten yolks of three eggs and flavoring to suit the taste; rinse the egg bowl with one cupful of milk and add to the above mixture alternately with two and one-half cupfuls of pastry flour sifted with two and one-half teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one-half teaspoonful of salt. Beat the batter hard for a few minutes to thoroughly incorporate the baking powder, then fold in the stiffly beaten whites of three eggs. Bake in a loaf, a layer or in individual cakes.

To make a spice cake, add one-half teaspoonful of cinnamon, a quarter teaspoonful of mace or nutmeg, and the same of cloves. Bake in a loaf and ice with chocolate. To make chocolate cake omit two tablespoonfuls of flour, add two tablespoonfuls of cocoa, or unsweetened chocolate melted. Bake in layers and use orange filling.

Waffles.—Sift one and one-quarter cupfuls of flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of soda and add, slowly, one cupful of sour cream or milk, one-quarter cupful of melted butter, three egg yolks. Beat well and fold in the stiffly-beaten egg whites and cook on a hot waffle iron. Serve with butter and maple sirup.

Reheat any leftover pumpkin pie, garnish with a spoonful of whipped cream, and sprinkle with grated cheese or chopped nuts, whichever is convenient.

Sowing One's "Wild Oats" Old English Expression

To "sow wild oats" means to commit youthful excesses or to spend one's time in dissipation. It usually implies subsequent reform. The expression originated, so far as known, among the country folks of England. Wild oats—a tall grass resembling the cultivated oat and probably its original progenitor—is a common weed in grain fields. It is natural that a weed so common and obnoxious should become the subject of a comparison among the country people. The expression dates back as far at least as the Sixteenth century. At first it merely meant sowing worthless seed or seed which would produce a worthless crop. The moral meaning was a natural transition from the literal significance. He who wastes the precious days of his youthful prime in dissipation is sowing seeds which will grow up into obnoxious weeds.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Some Value in Name

The name of a Wyandotte county (Kansas) man saved him tax money for many years. Albert H. Reid bought some property six years ago on time payments and received the deed this year. He asked the amount of taxes and was told that he did not owe anything, for the land was listed as M. E. Church, and church property is not taxed. Then Reid said: "M. E. Church is the name of the man I bought it from, and there isn't a church within six blocks of the property."

Internal cleanliness protects against disease
IN CONSTIPATION, say intestinal specialists, lies the primary cause of more than three-quarters of all illness, including the gravest diseases of life.
Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.
Why Physicians Favour Lubrication
Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.
Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.
Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

Betty Blythe was preparing for one of her personal-appearance tours and as she wanted to make a good impression she studied her monologue every chance she got. Her opening line began: "My name is Betty Blythe."

While walking down Hollywood boulevard she was still studying, saying her lines over and over again with the result that she bumped into three young men.

Betty was so startled that she blurted out: "My name is Betty Blythe," at the top of her voice.

Feel Stiff and Achy After Every Cold?
Do You Have Constant Backache? Feel Old and Lame and Suffer Sharp, Rheumatic Pains? Then Look to Your Kidneys!
DOES every cold, chill or attack of grip leave you worn-out and utterly miserable? Do you feel old and lame, stiff and rheumatic? Does your back ache with a dull, unceasing throb, until it seems you just can't stand it any longer?
Then look to your kidneys! Grip, colds and chills are mighty hard on the kidneys. They fill the blood with poisons and impurities that the kidneys must filter off. The kidneys weaken under this rush of new work; become congested and inflamed.
It's little wonder then that every [illegible] leaves you with torturing backache, rheumatic pains, headaches, dizziness and annoying bladder irregularities.
Don't delay! Get a box of Doan's Pills. Give your weakened kidneys the help they need. Assist them, also, by drinking pure water freely, eating lightly and getting plenty of fresh air and rest. Doan's Pills have helped thousands and should help you. Ask your neighbor!

JOHN RADKE, retired farmer, Hankinson, N. D., says: "My back ached and pained and when I did stoop I could hardly straighten. They were just the thing to strengthen my back and put my kidneys in good condition."

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage containing a Power of Sale, by reason of which default said Power of Sale has become operative, and the Assignee of the Mortgagee hereinafter named is authorized to declare the whole sum due, and it hereby does declare said sum due, which mortgage was executed by Jacob Brun and Christine Brun, his wife, Mortgagors, to Deposit Trust & Savings Bank, Winona, Minnesota, a corporation under the laws of the State of Minnesota, Mortgagee, dated November 8th, 1920 and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 12th day of November, A. D. 1920, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 103 of Mortgages, on page 30,

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Deposit Trust & Savings Bank, Winona, Minnesota, Mortgagee, to Deposit Bank & Trust Company, by written assignment, dated July 31st, 1924, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 3rd day of December, A. D. 1924 at 11 o'clock A. M., in Book 110 of Mortgages, on page 335.

And whereas, the said Deposit Bank & Trust Company, the asignee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms of said mortgage and the Power of Sale therein contained; and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due on said mortgage, at the date of this notice, the sum of Four Thousand Dollars ($4000.00), with accumulated interest from the 8th day of November 1920 at the rate of six and one-half per cent per annum; and whereas, the said Power of Sale has become operative and no action or proceedings having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz:

The East Half of the Southwest Quarter (E½SW¼) and Lots Three and Four of Section Eighteen (18), in Township One Hundred Fifty-five (155) North, of Range Forty-three (43) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota.

Which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the front door of the County Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 27th day of January 1925, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the amount then due on said mortgage and interest, together with the costs and disbursements of such sale and Seventy-five Dollars attorneys fees stipulated as attorneys fees in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

We are now selling our butter through the Minnesota Co-Operative Creameries Assn., Inc. and our aim should be to MAKE a Land O' Lakes product.

To produce Land O' Lakes quality everything should be kept clean and all utensils must be scalded well. Cool the cream quickly in water, the year around, stirring while cooling. To deliver cream often is very important. If you live far from town you should club together with your neighbors. You dont realize what a difference there is in making butter from cream delivered 2 times a week, and cream delivered weekly— even tho your week old cream is sweet. Let us get into the Land O' Lakes class and we shall be well paid for it.

Big Happenings of the Week Condensed for the Benefit of Busy Readers.

Washington

Washington—Expenditure of $10,300,000 for additional hospital facilities for World war veterans is proposed in a bill introduced in the house.

Washington—Thomas O. Marvin of Massachusetts and William S. Culbertson of Kansas have been redesignated chairman and vicechairman, respectively, of the tariff commission by President Coolidge.

Washington—Hearing on the complaint against a number of companies alleging conspiracy to restrain competition and create a monopoly in manufacture, purchase and sale in interstate commerce of radio and other electrical devices and apparatus, will be started by the Federal Trade commission March 18, at New York.

Washington — President Coolidge recommended to congress the appropriation of $40,000 for defraynig the expenses of the inaugural ceremony on March 4. This is $10,000 less than the amount appropriated in 1920. The proposed sum has the approval of the joint congressional committee and Budget Director H. M. Lord.

Domestic

Long Beach, Calif.—Swaine Sherdahl, 84 years old, landscape gardener, who is credited with much of the beauty of Lincoln park, Chicago, is dead here.

Lansing, Mich.—The State Supreme Court affirmed the judgment passed on Charles E. Ruthenberg, convicted of violating the Michigan antisyndicalism law, in the circuit court in Berrien county.

Denver—A petition, protesting the election of Judge Ben B. Lindsey to the bench in the Denver juvenile and family court has been filed by Royal B. Graham, defeated candidate for the judgeship, in the last November election.

Indianapolis—October 5 to 9 were selected as the dates for the seventh annual convention of the American Legion by the national executive committee in session here. The convention will be conducted at Omaha.

Dayton, Ohio—Dayton police received word from J. H. Yancy, chief of police of Long Beach, Calif., reporting the theft of an airplane which bears the number 55 painted on a rudder.

Los Angeles—Alexander Carr, character comedian of stage and screen, was the defendant in a divorce suit filed here by Mrs. Helen Cressman Carr, a bride of three months. She alleged cruelty. Mrs. Carr seeks $500 a week alimony.

West Palm Beach, Fla.—Mrs. Croker announced at her winter home in Palm Beach that she plans to spend half of the many millions left her by her late husband, Richard Croker, for three memorials in his honor. The memorials are to be erected in New York city, Ireland and Palm Beach.

Atlanta—Selection of Detroit, Mich., as the 1925 convention city and consideration of important reports marked the sessions of the executive committee of the American Bar Association, meeting here with Secretary of State Charles Evans Hughes as presiding officer.

Springfield, Ill.—William H. "Big Bill" Thompson, twice mayor of Chicago, announced his candidacy for mayor in 1927. The announcement was made at a big roundup of his friends who came down to Springfield on the "Big Bill" special to attend the inaugural ceremonies.

Los Angeles—Wilbur D. Campbell, indicted in connection with jury tampering charges in the recent "Kid" McCoy manslaughter verdict, surrendered to Sheriff William Traeger. He was arraigned and release on a $5,000 bond.

Leavenworth, Kan.—Two Negroes, alleged slayers of A. Hyman, proprietor of a loan office here, who was beaten to death after being bound and gagged, were secretly arraigned and taken to the state penitentiary at Lansing to forestall possible mob violence. Bond was fixed at $50,000 each.

Schenectady, N. Y.—The Union College Radio Club announces the development for what is said to be the first time of a radio wave length of only 3.8 meters. The lowest recorded wave length previously was said to be 7 meters. Edmund B Redington of Waverly, N. Y., president of the club, said the new low wave length was produced through the use of standard equipment. Coils and conductors were eliminated from a radio set and two 50 watt tubes were employed. These were attached to flexible leads, and the wave length was obtained by extending or decreasing the distances between the tubes.

Manila—The United States destroyers Tracy, Smith Thompson and John D. Edwards of the Asiatic fleet left for Shanghai as a result of the fighting reported there between rival Chinese factions. Other warships are under orders to proceed to the district in the event of their services being required there.

Chicago—The 90 foot power yacht the Speejacks, in which Albert Y Gowan and his wife, now divorced, made a trip around the world, has been sold to Philip Wrigley, son of William Wrigley, Jr., it was announced here.

Sports

Grand Rapids, Mich.—Tommy Gibbons, St. Paul light heavyweight, defeated Jack Burke of Pittsburgh in the sixth round of their scheduled 10-round no-decision fight here. The referee stopped the fight in the sixth round, awarding Gibbons a technical knockout.

Newark—Mickey Walker, world's welterweight champion, stepped two notches out of his class, and outpointed Mike McTigue, world's light heavyweight champion, in a rather tame 12-round no-decision encounter ed in Newark armory.

Foreign

Madrid—King Alfonso and Queen Victoria have completely recovered from their indisposition and have resumed their usual daily activities. The king and queen presided at a banquet to the diplomatic corps.

Constantinople—Violent earthquake shocks were felt in the region of Ardahan, Russian Armenia, according to reports received here. Several villages were reported destroyed and many lives were said to have been lost.

Berlin—After lying 75 years in a grave of German soil, the body of an American sailor has been exhumed at Hanover by order of the United States government and shipped to America on the steamship Republic.

Havana—A duel with swords was fought here between Dr. Rafael De La Torre, secretary of the Cuban legation in Brussels, and Dr. Andres R. Abela of the department of state. Dr. De La Torre was wounded in the forearm.

Paris—Benigo Varelo, editor of the magazine Monarchy published in Madrid, who challenged Blasco Ibanez to a duel, charges that Senor Ibanez received 1,000,000 pesetas from the Russian propaganda committee for writing his "defamatory book against King Alfonso."

Budapest—Jeremiah Smith, high commissioner for the League of Nations in Hungary, and formerly a Boston lawyer, is seriously ill in a sanatorium here as the result of overwork in trying to solve Hungary's economic problems. Mr. Smith, who is suffering from melancholia, refuses to see even his personal friends.

Buc, France — Departure of the French aerial expedition of two airplanes for a flight across North Africa and the Sahara desert to Lake Tohad was postponed because of fog. One machine is to be comanded by Captain Georges Pelleteir Doisy of Paris to Tokio flight fame.

London—The Saoud, head of the Wahabi forces, has been wounded by a bomb, according to a dispatch to the Daily Mail from Jerusalem, quoting the Arabian Press. The Hedjas army has dealt a severe blow to the Wahabi forces, is now at the gates of Mecca, according to the dispatch which stated the Wahabis were fleeing.

Bucharest—The suit of the Baldwin Locomotive Works of Philadelphia, on a claim of $2,500,000 against the Rumanian government, was to have begun now but an adjournment of a few days was taken to permit the company's local representative to submit to headquarters in Philadelphia a last minute proposal made by the government for a settlement.

London—Lydia Lopokova, Russian dancer, famed throughout America, was granted a divorce here from Randolpho Barrochi, whom she married at Westchester in October, 1916. The complaint charged that Barrochi, who was manager of the troupe of which she was at that time a member, had another wife on the day of the ceremony. A decree was previously granted in the United States, according to the evidence.

London—Protesting his innocence in a sputting outburst, William C. Hobbs, formally was charged on three counts with conspiracy to defraud Sir Henri Singh in the famous Robinson case. The testimony by his alleged accomplice, Newton, who turned state's evidence, was branded by Mr. Hobbs as a "tissue of lies." It was Mr. Hobbs' eighth appearing in court and he collapsed after making a statement.

Rome—Ignace Jan Paderewski was heard at a concert here for the first time in 28 years. It proved a huge success. The auditors comprised the most distinguished personalities in Roman society, headed by the Queen Mother Margarita. Premier Mussolini sent word to Paderewski regretting inability to leave the chamber of deputies to attend the concert.

London—All hands on board the British freighter Cardiff Hall were lost when the steamer, during a heavy southerly gale, struck the southern point of Seven Heads, Clonabilty, and immediately went to pieces, according to Lloyd's Queenstown correspondent, who visited the scene of the disaster. The Cardiff Hall was bound from Buenos Aires for Cork. Nothing of the ship is visible, although some wreckage, a small quantity of maize and two bodies were washed ashore.

Moscow—Fifty men had been frozen to death in a blizzard of unusual ferocity in the Caucasus. Thousands of cattle perished.

London — The crossword puzzle craze has extended to Sandringham, where it is stated that Queen Mary has taken up the pastime of solving the problems published by the newspapers. The lesser members of the royal family are also addicted to the word hunting game. Word problems are not new to Queen Mary. In her younger days she spent much time solving acrostics and composing others for her attendants.

STATE SLOGAN WINNER PICKED

"The Best Of The West—North Dakota," Wins First In Sorlie Contest.

Grand Forks, N. D.—"The best of the west—North Dakota," was selected as the best slogan for North Dakota by the slogan committee of the North Dakota Press Association which met at Valley City Friday and Saturday, according to announcement by J. F. Bacon, re-elected president of the association. More than 2,500 slogans were submitted.

Although only one first prize and one second prize was intended, so many slogans bearing out the idea expressed in the winner, were submitted that some difficulty was encountered in selecting the winning people.

After deciding upon the best submitted idea, it was found that two persons had submitted identical slogans and accordingly the first prize of $35 offered by Governor A. G. Sorlie, was divided equally between Mrs. Carolyn Paul and Mrs. J. A. Poppler, both of Grand Forks.

"Horace Greeley meant North Dakota," submitted by Mrs. F. R. Campbell of Grand Forks, was selected as the second winner and F. R. Campbell was awarded the second prize of $15 also given by Governor Sorlie. Checks for the prizes will be forwarded at once by Secretary M. I. Forkner of the association.

Slogans were received from every corner of the state and as they arrived each letter was given a number and the slogans contained therein were typewritten opposite the number so the committee did not know who the winners were until after the selections were made, neither did they have the arguments before them that were put forth by the sender in favor of his or her slogan.

GERMANY WILL FULFILTERMS

Is Pledge of New Luther Ministry; Reciprocation Expected.

Berlin.—Loyal fulfillment by Germany of the London agreement on the Dawes plan and strict enforcement of the laws dictated by it are among the pledges contained in the program announced by the new government headed by Dr. Hans Luther as chancellor to the reichstag.

Germany, on the other hand, says the pronouncement, expects an equal measure of reciprocal loyalty by all the signatories to the London agreement.

The non-evacuation of the Cologne area was declared by the chancellor to be in violation of the letter and spirit of the London agreement and the new government, therefore, was in full accord with the protest lodged by its predecessor.

The Luther government proposes negotiations at the earliest date possible to reach a settlement of this issue, which the chancellor declared was indispensable to internal, political and economic peace and to the maintenance of amicable foreign relations.

WHEELER STILL IN HOSPITAL

Less Serious Charge Placed Against Girl in Wheeler Case.

Fargo, N. D.—Charges of committing a felony, made aginst Miss Margaret MacAfee, Fargo department store clerk, who is alleged to have shot Percy Wheeler in the head with a .22 revolver last Wednesday night, and aginst Carlton Lindquist, employe of a local sporting goods store—alleged to have sold her the gun—were changed to misdemeanors by agreement between H. F. Horner, state's attorney, and W. H. Barnett, counsel for the two defendants.

Meanwhile, Percy Wheeler, victim of the shooting, is still confined to St. John's hospital with the bullet in his head, although resting easily. Another operation to remove it will be performed.

COOLIDGE TO CHOOSE SOON

Man With Financial Training Sought for Secretary of Agriculture.

Washington. — With only half a dozen names remaining on the original list of some 200 suggested for the post of secretary of agriculture after March 4, President Coolidge may conclude this week his quest for the individual meeting what he regards as the chief demands of the office at this time.

As a successor to the post of Howard M. Gore, governor-elect of West Virginia, the president is seeking someone primarily with a background of business administration that would qualify to deal constructively with the agricultural marketing problem. This situation has served to eliminate the great number on the list qualified primarily, either as a "dirt" farmer or an agricultural college president

1924 Iron Ore Output Drops

Washington —Iron ore mined in the United States in 1924 was estimated by the Interior department at 54,021,000 gross tons, a decrease of 22 per cent under 1923. Ore shipped from mines was 51,996,000 gross tons, valued at $151,385,000, a decrease of 6 per cent. The average value of the ore a ton at the mines was estimated at $2.91. The decrease in output was ascribed partly to a slowing up in demand for steel and to general reaction in pig iron manufacture following the record year 1923.

DAIRY

PROVED SIRES WORTH FIRST-CLASS STABLE

Years of observation have led E. J. Perry, New Jersey State college dairy specialist, New Brunswick, to believe that proper stabling of the bull makes it easy to retain him for several years.

"Since the bull is half the herd where heifers are raised, his health and physical well-being are of signal importance," says Mr. Perry. "A box stall 10 by 12 feet is suitable for the bull on the average farm. A strong paddock outside should be provided with a door from the box stall. In this paddock the bull can take the exercise which he always needs. A steel pen of heavy construction with a corner manger makes the best bull pen.

"All but the severest weather is beneficial to the breeding bull. Open-air treatment with the attendant exercise helps to insure a bull's breeding powers until he is nine or ten years old.

"New Jersey dairymen need to use more proved sires. The man who has a dairy already highly developed cannot afford to risk lowering his production by the use of young, untried bulls every two or three years. A study of the methods of great breeders of the past shows that they judged a bull by his offspring rather than by his ancestors. When a sire once proves his worth through his daughter, he is invaluable.

"After using a young bull for two years a forward-looking dairyman can afford to loan him out until his daughters come in milk. The exchange of matured, proved sires between dairymen with healthy herds should become a common practice. The strongly built box stall and paddock or runway will eliminate all danger in the handling of the matured animal."

Feeding Heifer Calves to Secure Best Returns

Holstein heifers that were fed a liberal ration of grain, either corn or mixed grains, were 150 pounds heavier at two years of age than those fed only a limited amount of the same kind of grain, according to the tests at the Nebraska Agricultural college at Lincoln. Liberally fed Jerseys were fully 50 pounds heavier than their mates that were fed only a little grain. Liberal feeding produced no more gains than light feeding during the first six months of the calf's life while milk was being fed. The benefits from the additional grain all came after the calf had been weaned from the milk. All dairy calves should be on a light grain ration by the time they are old enough to be weaned from their milk, and this ration should then be increased at such a rate that the desired growth will be obtained.

Feed Cows Liberally, Is Ohio's Recommendation

That it pays to feed dairy cows liberally is proven by the experience of the Ohio experiment station. Increasing the feed not only increased the annual production but added a neat sum to the net profits.

Under good average feeding, such as is practical on many dairy farms, 23 cows gave an average annual production of 8,198 pounds of milk and 335 pounds of butterfat. The same cows during the year of heavier feeding averaged 13,548 pounds of milk and 568 pounds of fat; or an increase of 65 per cent in milk and 69 per cent in butterfat.

On the ordinary ration the feed requirement for each pound of butterfat was 15.5 units, costing 27.1 cents. On the heavy ration the requirement was only 13.7 units, costing 24.1 cents.

Low Quality Butter

Old, stale cream is the most important cause of the low quality of butter. Cream, when held for a week even if kept at low temperature, develops an old flavor. As production decreases in the fall there is a tendency among farmers to hold their cream too long. Cream should be delivered at least twice a week during the cooler months.

Dairy Notes

Wash flanks and udders of the cows with a mild disinfectant solution before each milking.

* * *

Cream varies greatly in butterfat content, so that the only satisfactory method is to run a test regularly every month on every cow.

* * *

Probably more failures in the dairy business can be directly traced to the farmer's lack of knowledge of just exactly what each cow is returning him than any one cause.

* * *

As the greatest part of milk is made up of water, one can readily understand why a cow producing a large or small amount of milk requires water in proportion to her production.

* * *

One pound of either of the grain mixtures, depending on the kind of hay available, should be fed for each three pounds of Jersey or Guernsey milk, or four pounds of Holstein or Ayrshire milk. When silage is not available, a little more grain should be fed.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

WEEKLY MENU HINTS

Common vegetables, well cooked, well seasoned and served hot will be enjoyed by those who are not particularly fond of them. To teach a child to like a certain vegetable it must be carefully seasoned, using plenty of butter to make it palatable. Scant the butter in other foods, but use plenty for seasoning vegetables.

SUNDAY—Breakfast: Oranges, muffins. Dinner: Roast goose, savory apples, peach shortcake, coffee. Supper: Mush and milk, chocolate, cake.

MONDAY—Breakfast: Cantaloupe, cereal with cream, toast. Dinner: Cream of tomato soup, fried oysters, cabbage salad. Supper: Hash on toast, pineapple, cake.

TUESDAY — Breakfast: Grapes, omelet, rye muffins. Dinner: Vegetable soup, veal cutlets, celery, steamed pudding. Supper: Cold sliced tongue, potato salad.

WEDNESDAY—Breakfast: Grapefruit, oatmeal, frizzled ham, creamed potatoes. Dinner: Cream of celery soup, roast beef, turnip croquettes. Supper: French toast, preserves, jelly cake, cocoa.

THURSDAY — Breakfast: Pears, cereal, waffles. Dinner: Corn soup, sliced roast beef with Mexican sauce. Supper: Cheese souffle, whole wheat bread.

FRIDAY—Breakfast: Baked apple, eggs on toast, coffee. Dinner: Salmon loaf with peas, steamed brown bread. Supper: Oyster stew, cole slaw.

SATURDAY — Breakfast: Stewed prunes, griddle cakes, coffee. Dinner: Baked beans, tomato sauce. Supper: Milk toast, sliced boiled ham.

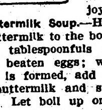
Savory Apples.

Place cored apples, six of them, in a baking dish. For filling take one cupful of bread crumbs, half teaspoonful of sage, the same of parsley and one teaspoonful of minced onions, half teaspoonful of salt and a dish of cayenne, moisten with three tablespoonfuls of thick cream, fill the cavities with this and bake until tender. Mint in place of sage may be added if the apples are to be served with lamb.

Turnip Croquettes.

Cook the turnips until tender, drain and squeeze dry, add to each pint of turnip one mashed potato, the yolk of an egg, one teaspoonful of sugar and salt to taste with plenty of butter. Form into croquettes, dip in crumbs and egg and fry in deep fat.

Favorite Dishes.



The old saw, "What is one man's meat is another man's poison," is true of likes and dislikes. Of what some are exceedingly fond, others will not enjoy at all. A very appetizing and palatable dish that our Welsh friends enjoy is:

Buttermilk Soup.—Heat two quarts of buttermilk to the boiling point. Mix three tablespoonfuls of flour with three beaten eggs; when a smooth paste is formed, add a little of the hot buttermilk and stir it into the soup. Let boil up once, add butter and sugar to taste and serve hot.

Plum Cake.—Take one pound of light bread dough warmed slightly, add one cupful each of molasses and sugar, one cupful of butter, three eggs, one and three-quarters cupfuls of flour, mixed spices to taste, a little extract of lemon, or better, the grated rind of a lemon; mix thoroughly to a smooth batter and set in a warm place to rise. In about three hours beat again, add a cupful of raisins, half a cupful of currants and one-quarter cupful of finely sliced citron. Flour the fruit before adding. Line pans or molds with buttered paper, half fill with the dough, set to rise again for about two hours. Bake in a moderate oven. Test with a wooden toothpick to be sure they are well baked.

Court Bouillon.—Take four quarts of water, one onion, one slice of carrot, two cloves, two tablespoonfuls of salt, one teaspoonful of pepper, one tablespoonful of vinegar, the juice of half a lemon and a bouquet of sweet herbs. Tie the onion, carrot, cloves and herbs in a piece of muslin and put into the water with the other ingredients. Cover and simmer for one hour; now add a fish which is to be boiled and cook as usual. Tie the fish in a thin cheesecloth to keep it from breaking. This method gives a fine flavor to fish. Serve with any good fish sauce.

Allemande sauce is prepared like a white sauce, using stock instead of milk, then a little lemon juice, egg yolks, salt, pepper and a very light pinch of nutmeg.

Lemon and Banana Pie.—Line a pastry pan with a good rich crust and make for twelve minutes. Cook two tablespoonfuls of cornstarch, mixed with one cupful of sugar, one-quarter teaspoonful of salt and one-half cupful each of orange juice and cold water, twenty minutes. Add slowly two egg yolks, beaten; cook until thick; cool; add one-quarter cupful of lemon juice and one banana, sliced thin. Pile in the shell; cover with another banana, sliced thin. Beat the egg whites; add six tablespoonfuls of sugar. Place in the oven after piling roughly over the pie. Brown lightly.

SUFFERED AFTER BIRTH OF BABY

Trouble Caused by Getting Up Too Soon. Relieved by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Talcville, New York.—"I thought it would interest you to know what benefit I have derived from taking your medicine. A few days after the birth of my third child I got up too quick. Then just before my fifth child was born I had inflammation of the bladder and displacement. Seeing your advertisement in a Liverpool (England) paper I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and that was the best confinement I had. Whenever I feel rundown I always take the Vegetable Compound as a tonic. We have just removed from Brockville (Canada) so I was pleased when the store ordered the medicine for me and I got it today. I would not be without it for any price and I recommend it to ladies around here because I feel so sure it will benefit any woman who takes it."—Mrs. AGNES WIGNALL, Talcville, New York.

Women can depend upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve them from ills peculiar to their sex. For sale by druggists everywhere.

Two Extremes

President Angell of Yale said at a New Haven party:

"We have almost too many colleges in America: Tusculam college, Wooford, Chicora, Tarkio, Pomona, Kenka, Coker—queer places, some of them must be. England, on the other hand, has too few colleges—Oxford and Cambridge only.

"Oxford and Cambridge stand so high in the English schoolboy's mind that if you ask him what air is composed of, instead of answering that it is composed of oxygen and hydrogen, he will probably say:

"'Oxygen and cambridgen.'"

How's Your Stomach?

Racine, Wis.—"I had stomach trouble, also kidney and bladder trouble for years. I used ten bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and can truly say my health is real good now considering my age, as I am over sixty. I can recommend the 'Golden Medical Discovery' to anyone who is troubled as I was. I am very thankful to God and to Dr. Pierce for my good health." P. H. Roche, 1940 Asylum Ave. All dealers. Three generations of Resinol Soap users in this family

Long Beach, Cal., June 23:—"I wonder if you would care for this unsolicited testimonial. I began using Resinol Soap many years ago with my first baby. He and his wife are now using it for my two-year-old grandchild.

I have also two married daughters using it and one more daughter at home with the heaviest curly bobbed hair I ever saw. All my life people have asked what I used to make the children's hair so beautiful and to give them such clear, healthy complexions. I have had only two rules: Resinol Soap and good plain food.

Permanent roads are a good investment —not an expense

Road Building Far Behind the Automobile

Millions now recognize the automobile as a necessity. It is no longer a luxury for the few. Sixty per cent of its use is for business.

Because of this the modern paved highway has become an economic necessity.

Yet although the mileage of Concrete Roads and Streets has been steadily increasing, our highway system today lags far behind the automobile. The great majority of our highways are as out of date as the single-track, narrow gauge railway of fifty years ago.

Such a condition not only seriously handicaps the progress of the automobile as a comfortable, profitable means of transportation, but also holds back commercial, industrial and agricultural advancement in practically every section of the country. It is costing taxpayers millions of dollars annually.

Highway building should be continued and enlarged upon.

Your highway authorities are ready to carry on their share of this great public work. But they must have your support. Tell them you are ready to invest in more and wider Concrete Highways now.

—15—

"It's the drink in you. She isn't better-looking than any average woman in Avonmouth. See here, are you going to bust up the game or are you not?"

"I'll show you!" shouted Lancaster, breaking from Myers' grasp and rushing from the room.

He met the women at the foot of the stairs. His face was flushed, his hair disordered, his manner maniacal.

"You sneak, what are you butting into this show for?" he demanded of Mrs. Fraser.

The matron, cowed by his violence, trembled. She tried to pull Joan toward her room; then caught her eye and made the slightest gesture indicative of shooting. Lancaster raised his first threateningly.

The matron did not lift a finger to defend herself. She stood quite calmly, awaiting the expected blow; perhaps it was some atavistic trait inherited through generations of poor ancestors; and yet, servile although it might have been, the look on the woman's face was almost heroical.

The man let his fist fall; he seized the matron by the shoulders and pushed her back into her room. He turned the key in the lock and put it in his pocket.

"That's settled, I reckon," he said with satisfaction.

Joan's hand went into her pocket. Her fingers closed about the revolver handle. But at that moment the secretary, who had come out of his room, went up to Lancaster.

"See here, now," he began to remonstrate, "have a little sense, doctor. If you're bent on busting everything up, you and I part company."

The other turned on him with so menacing a gesture that Myers flung up his hands in despair and went back into his room. Joan stood facing the doctor alone. At that moment her decision was nearly ripened, and she felt conscious of no fear of him at all.

If he attempted violence she knew what she would do. But he did not lay hands on her. He stood leaning against the newel post at the foot of the stairs, watching her face.

Joan was searching his eyes for the least sign of the man she had known, and he broke off, scowling and wincing under her stare. Above his words was the sound of the beating rain, the lashing wind; and from within the matron's room Joan heard Mrs. Fraser crying in prayer:

"O Lord, save her!" she wailed. "Save that girl this night! O Lord, from the devil! Save her! Save her, O Lord!"

"Maybe I got you wrong," continued the doctor. "But if I did, I ask you, who's to blame? Didn't you come to me at my house in Avonmouth and ask for your job back? Weren't you as sweet as sugar when you wanted something out of me? And didn't you agree to come up here to work for me? Well, what's the inference, then? You can have your job back if you want it. But I can do better by you than that. You're too pretty for a nurse's job, and I told you so that day you turned on me in the theater like a wildcat. Now, then! It's up to you! Your move, partner!"

Joan tried to push past him, but he remained at the foot of the stairs, blocking her way.

"Let me pass, please!" she cried. "I'm going to leave the institute at once."

"Without your hat?" he sneered.

"Let me pass at once!"

"Well, I reckon I can't stop you," he rejoined. "Just one word more, though. Do you realize your situation? Do you know what people will say when you go to them with crazy stories about me? Nobody will think you came down here to the notorious John Lancaster after he'd fired you just because you were such a wonderful nurse that he couldn't do without you. What sort of reputation do you expect to have in Avonmouth? You can go, but you won't go there. Not back to Avonmouth, understand that well. I'll hound you out of the town, you little double-crosser!"

For the first time Joan felt her spirit begin to shrink from the ordeal. She was cowed, she was almost as helpless as if he had used physical violence toward her. And through the baneful dream she was aware that Myers had come out of his room and was watching the scene from the end of the hall, wearing a smug, complacent smile. Myers was getting his way and having his revenge in one.

And because the situation was too horrible for belief, Joan could remember only the Lancaster of the yesterday. She ran to the man and caught him by the arms, and looked into his face with pathetic earnestness.

"I'm going to stay, John!" she cried. "My faith is stronger than that. I remember what you have said to me and I remember my promise to you. Some day you will come to yourself and everything will be clear. I shall call to the John Lancaster I know against the man who claims to be he and is not."

"What do you mean?" shouted the other. "Whom do you take me for?"

"You are not the John Lancaster who won my love," cried Joan, with an impassioned gesture. "Let your better self hear and understand me. You asked me to stay and fight your battle with you, and nothing shall drive me from you till you tell me to go; and not even that; nothing shall make me falter till I have won you again."

The man's eyes blazed. "You're right; you're dead right there, Joan!" he cried, and caught her in his arms. He pressed his lips to hers.

She struggled wildly in his grasp. "Let me go!" she panted. But she could not free herself. She screamed. The matron's voice shrieked through the door. "Shoot him!" she cried. "Shoot him dead! Shoot him!"

Joan wrenched her arm free and struck at the man, but he pinioned it again.

"I've got you, Joan!" he cried triumphantly, "and nothing under heaven shall make me let you go."

Held as she was, Joan got her fingers into her pocket. She grasped the little revolver and pulled it forth. She thrust it upward into the man's face. He recoiled with an oath, squinting at the weapon, his face convulsed. And in that moment knowledge came to Joan Wentworth.

"You are not John Lancaster!" she cried.

As she spoke they heard the sound of halting footsteps on the porch. The door swung slowly open. Joan's hand dropped to her side, she slid the revolver mechanically into her pocket; she tried to cry but could not.

Upon the threshold of the door, looking out with a wry, distorted grin on his pale lips, was the man who had held her. And on the threshold, looking in, with eyes drug-clouded, swaying and clutching at the door-pillars to support himself upright, was the John Lancaster of yesterday. And even Joan, with all her love and hate, could not have told the one man from the other.

But with a cry she ran to Lancaster, and caught at him, and felt his arms about her.

Chapter XI

It seemed to Joan, long afterward, like some dreadful picture, the swaying man upon the threshold, to whom she clung, and his double within; and then the rasping voice of Myers broke the long silence.

"Well, well," said the secretary, rubbing his hands together, "here's a pretty kettle of fish. It will all have to come out now."

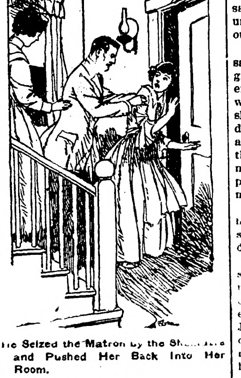
The Lancaster within the door turned his eyes from Joan to Myers; his passion and rage had frozen into malevolence.

"Don't put the blame on me," said Myers acidly. "I warned you to get rid of her."

Strangely, at that moment Joan felt that she, in spite of her physical weakness, was the dominating figure in the play, and the controlling mind as well.

John Lancaster advanced into the hall. His double, who had drawn back a pace or two, stood watching his efforts to steady himself with a scornful smile. Joan put her hands on her lover's arm; it seemed unbearable that he should display his weakness for them to mock at.

But then, glancing into his face, she saw that, weak as he was, and morphine-ridden, too, it was John Lancaster himself, virile in personality and mind, who had come back. The devil who had been exorcised had returned into his swept and garnished chamber, but he could claim only the physical domain. The body was [illegible] with the accursed drug, but the soul of John Lancaster looked from the cloudy eyes, a man's and not a weakling's.



He Seized the Matron by the Shoulders and Pushed Her Back Into Her Room.

And Joan knew that it was through no fault of his that he had come back enchained, and that her love had borne him throughout the day and kept his spirit whole.

Lancaster's double turned fiercely upon the secretary.

"Yes, it is a pretty kettle of fish," he retorted, "and it's going to be fried. We'll have this out tonight. Curse you, why didn't you stay here at your post instead of running to me? Were you afraid of this girl?"

"Who is this man?" Joan asked Lancaster.

"My half-brother and my evil spirit," he answered.

"Why don't you order [illegible] go?" Why don't you order them both to go?"

"Because," replied the other, sneering, "John Lancaster sold me his birthright for a mess of pottage—morphine pottage. That's why. Because it is I whom the world knows as John Lancaster, and not that outcast, who has sunk so low that he sold his very name for drugs."

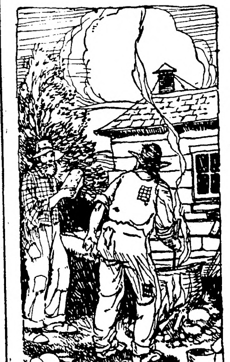
"That is a lie," said Lancaster. "You stole my name. You devil, you have robbed me of my manhood these four years past."

"Gentlemen," cried the secretary, "we've got to talk this matter over and this isn't the place. If the agreement has worked any injustice to Doctor Lancaster, no doubt it can be readjusted. It is clear that we've got to come to a sensible understanding. Let's face the facts like men, and talk it over in the doctor's room. And this girl had better go upstairs," he added.

"Miss Wentworth stays with me," said Lancaster.

The double and the secretary exchanged ironical glances. It was evident that they did not feel themselves to be in the position of trapped conspirators.

"Doctor Lancaster, if you cannot order them to leave, is it necessary that you should be drawn into a discussion now?" Joan asked.



Became a Common Tramp and Wandered About the Country With Hoboes.

"Yes, it is necessary," said Lancaster. "I'll fight this thing with Lawson to a finish tonight."

"Lawson?"

"I believe that I am Lawson," said Lancaster's half-brother, with an ironical bow. "Though I have as good a right to the name as Doctor Lancaster here. Perhaps I should have introduced myself before. But now that we are all introduced I am ready to accept Mr. Myers' sensible suggestion."

They went toward Lancaster's room. Joan perceived now that the doctor's weakness was purely a physical one; he dragged his limbs slightly, the curious result of the morphine poisoning that she had noted before. But he was gaining strength rapidly, and his will had never been stronger.

This was the last battle, of which he had so often spoken to her. This fight must end his captivity.

She went into the room with him, confident in that belief. Myers closed the door behind them and placed his thickset body in front of it. It was astonishing to see how Lancaster braced himself for the ordeal. He drew himself up, standing erect, and faced the others.

"Doctor Lancaster has the floor," said Lawson mockingly. "At least, I understand that the proposal to revise our agreement comes from him."

"Joan, I owe you an explanation," said Lancaster, turning toward the girl. "This morning, after I had operated, I was called to the house which people think is mine—which should be mine," he added with sudden vehemence. "I was told it was an urgent case. I found these men there. They drew me into an argument, and in the heat of it Myers plunged a needleful of morphine into my arm."

"To quiet you, because you were becoming violent and injuring yourself," sneered the secretary. "Yes, I did, and I left you in good hands."

"They left me senseless in the consulting room, but I managed to force my limbs to obey my will. John Lancaster had still a little more will power than they had counted on. And John Lancaster's name was enough to conjure up a special train this afternoon, though they had robbed him of his money."

Joan put her hands on Lancaster's shoulders. "That is all you need to tell me," she said quietly. "I knew you had been trapped by them. I never doubted you."

"Eight years ago," said Lancaster, "I was a man respected in Avonmouth and everywhere throughout the South. Then a domestic trouble overtook me. You know what that was, Joan. It broke me down. I could not cope with life. I lost my grip on reality gave up my work—"

"Yes, John, now we're getting at the truth," interposed Lawson bitterly. "You, the honored head of the Southern hospital, became a common tramp and wandered about the country with hoboes, and I have been living down your reputation for you. Go on, John. Don't skip the interesting parts."

Boschee's Syrup

Allays irritation, soothes and heals throat and lung inflammation. The constant irritation of a cough keeps the delicate mucus membrane of the throat and lungs in a congested condition, which BOSCHEE'S SYRUP gently and quickly heals. For this reason it has been a favorite household remedy for colds, coughs, bronchitis and especially for lung troubles in millions of homes all over the world for the last fifty-eight years, enabling the patient to obtain a good night's rest, free from coughing with easy expectoration in the morning. You can buy BOSCHEE'S SYRUP wherever medicines are sold.—Adv.

Stream Makes Trouble

An underground river exists in the city of London, and architects and engineers of new buildings under construction near the Bank of England are caused much trouble by this hidden stream, which, though covered up and forgotten in the Sixteenth century, still flows. The deep basements of new buildings near it have to be watertight tanks. The course of the Walbrook is right under the Bank of England and may give trouble when the new building is erected. The Walbrook was a tidal river—being apparently 30 to 40 feet wide at high tide—and it is still tidal. The river is about 30 feet beneath the level of the ground at the bank. When the new bank is constructed it may be advisable to run the stream through pipes.

New Fad in Diamonds

The sparkling diamond will no longer be fashionable, if Paris and London jewelers have anything to say about it. They are cutting the stones to give them a dull and somber look. This is done in "slat" effect. Diamonds so cut are about seven times dearer than the old "sparklers" because of so much waste. Onyx, sapphire, ruby and emerald cuttings in square or oblong slats are now quite fashionable in Europe. It is the "facets," small triangular facings which enable a diamond to catch and reflect light from so many angles, that give it great brilliancy.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Measuring Light's Velocity

The velocity of light may be measured in the laboratory by the following method: A cogged wheel is so mounted that a ray of light passes between two of the teeth and is reflected back from a mirror. Slight as is the fraction of a second which light takes to travel the distance, it is possible to give such speed to the wheel that the next tooth catches the ray of light on its return and cuts it off. The speed is increased still further until the ray of light returns to the eye of the observer through the notch next to the one by which it had passed to the mirror. The speed of the wheel being known, it is thus possible to determine the velocity of light.

Duck Had Traveled Far

A duck, killed by Charles Glessner of Oneida, S. D., had a bone arrowhead imbedded in its breast. It is believed that the arrowhead, which is as sharp as a needle and only an inch in length, is made from walrus bone. The meat around the arrowhead was in perfect condition and indicated that the wound must have been healed for several weeks. Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage containing a Power of Sale, by reason of which default said Power of Sale has become operative, and the Assignees of the Mortgages hereinafter named are authorized to declare the whole sum due and they hereby do declare said sum due, which mortgage was executed by Frank A. Gilbert, as Administrator of the Estate of Junia N. Gilbert deceased, Mortgagor, to Holt State Bank, Holt, Minnesota, Mortgagee, dated May 17th, 1921 and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 28th day of May, A. D. 1921 at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 104 of Mortgages, on page 342,

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Holt State Bank, Holt, Minnesota, Mortgagee, to Deposit Trust & Savings Bank, by written assignment, dated June 2nd, A. D. 1921 and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 27th day of June, A. D. 1921 at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 98 of Mortgages, on page 558;

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Deposit Trust & Savings Bank, of Winona, Minnesota, to Mrs. Emma Lucht and Caroline Klippel, joint tenants, by written assignment, dated January 5th 1925 and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 7th day of January A. D. 1925 at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 110 of Mortgages, on page 350;

And whereas, the said Mrs. Emma Lucht and Caroline Klippel, the assignees and holders of said mortgage, have duly elected and do hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage, and the Power of Sale therein contained; and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two Thousand Dollars ($2000.00), with accumulated interest from the 17th day of May 1921 at the rate of six and one-half per cent per annum; and whereas, the said Power of Sale has become operative and no action or proceedings having been instituted at law, or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz:

The Southeast Quarter (SE¼) of Section Seventeen (17), in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North of Range Forty (40) West, in Marshall County Minnesota.

Which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the Front door of the County Court House, at Warren, in said County and State, on the 3rd day of March, 1925 at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the amount then due on said mortgage and interest and all delinquent taxes, if any, on said premises, together with the costs and disbursements of such sale and Seventy-five Dollars Attorney's fees stipulated as attorneys fees in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

Dated January 19th 1925.

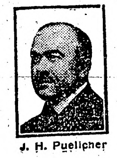
WHY BANKS?

LESSON XII

By J. H. PUELICHER, Chairman
Public Education Commission, American Bankers Association

What is a Trust Company? Technically defined it is a bank that specializes in investment and fiduciary services in addition to general banking services. Humanly speaking, it is what its name implies—a place of trust.



J. H. Puelicher

INVESTMENT—lending money for income or profit to business and governments to "carry on." Such lending is often done through the purchase by investors of bonds selected by a bank or a trust company as safe and desirable.

FIDUCIARY—held in trust and confidence. For example, a trustee holds a man's estate for the benefit of his widow or children, cares for it faithfully, invests it prudently and uses it for their welfare in accordance with his wishes.

TRUST COMPANIES are able to fulfill these functions because of their experience in investments, because of their trained officers, and because of their continuous existence while an individual often knows nothing of investments, usually lacks experience and training, and may die during the life of the trust.

BACK TO NORMAL

In no period since the war has greater progress in the return to normal business conditions been made by industry, commerce and finance than during the past year. This reestablishment of normal conditions has been brought about by the working of purely economic influences. These influences and this result completely refute the arguments and pretensions of opportunist politicians and radical demagogues who have sought to bring about readjustment by political measures. These measures were aimed to give gratuitous advantages to the special interests and classes which the proposers assumed to represent, to the detriment of the general good.

The virtual disappearance, by natural economic processes, of the abnormalities that have persisted, as the long drawn out aftermath of the war, has removed whatever justification their presence seemed to give for governmental paternalism and for special measures of relief for particularly distressed classes. At best these measures were merely sedatives for psychological conditions and not real remedies for economic conditions. To that extent they served a purpose, but there is no further public good that they can serve. With normal conditions once more established it should be the resolute determination of all business men to resist any further effort at political interference with economic processes.

The time is at hand for a thoroughgoing return to a free play of private enterprise and private initiative under unhampered competitive conditions. Government influence and political interference in respect to business should be reduced to an absolute minimum. We as bankers ask no special privileges for ourselves. Equally we are opposed to special privileges for other groups at the expense of the general welfare. The experience of the past few years has been one of the greatest demonstrations in history of the validity of the view that the community interests of a people are best served by the maximum degree of private enterprise and private initiative with the minimum of government regulation.—Declaration of the American Bankers Association.

OPPOSES FEDERAL RAIL OWNERSHIP

Government Operation Would Mean Increased Taxation for General Public, Says Rail Head.

Opposition to Government ownership of the railroads, not because of the interests of the present owners but rather because of the burdens and disadvantages the change would impose upon the people as a whole, was expressed by C. H. Markham, president of the Illinois Central Railroad, in an address before the recent convention of the American Bankers Association.

"We have never favored Government ownership as a national policy." Mr. Markham said. "If the railroads are taken over by the Government, we must face the fact that the big step in reversing our old and settled policy will be taken. If there is no particular reason why the Government should not own and run the railroads, is there any reason why it should not take over also the banks, the stores, the factories, the farms, until all of us are Government employees and the ideal of the soviet is attained? The railroads are the first line of defense against those who would make this country a second Russia.

"The railroads have about 2,000,000 employees, approximately as many employees as there are in all the Government services—Federal, State, county and municipal—put together. If the railroads are taken over by the Government, there will be one Government employee out of every ten wage earners in the country, instead of one out of every twenty, as at present.

Doubling Taxation

"Then, too, there is the matter of taxation. The railroads, under private ownership, are among our heaviest taxpayers. Last year they paid taxes amounting to $3 for every man, woman and child in the country. In some counties, particularly in the Middle West, the railroads pay from 10 per cent to nearly 50 per cent of the taxes collected. Under Government ownership, the railroads would be no more subject to taxation than the post offices now are. In some way the Government would have to make up the difference of $3 a head for every person in the country. In many counties the taxes on the remaining property would have to be nearly doubled. The result would be an unbearable burden that might force many of our local governments to stop payments on their bonds and go into bankruptcy. The tax problem would be a great deal more vexatious than it is today.

"Then, too, the acquisition of the railroads would add more than twenty billion dollars to our national debt. If Government railroads in this country were no more successful than they are elsewhere today in the world, the interest on that twenty billions of purchase price would be the cause for additional burdens on the taxpayers left to carry it. As the tax burden developed, it would not be surprising to see other industries welcoming Government ownership for themselves. They would gain immunity from taxation in turn, and their owners probably would be protected from loss. The Constitution prevents the confiscation of private property, and Government ownership can be accomplished only by paying a fair price for the properties taken over.

Bad for Public

"I do not oppose Government ownership of the railroads on behalf of the present owners of the railroads, many of whom would obtain safety in Government bonds in return for securities which have not paid a return in years. I oppose Government ownership of the railroads because I believe that it would be bad for our people as a whole. It would open the way to Government ownership of everything, and at the same time it would certainly lead to the wrecking of our highly essential railway service, if the lessons of experience offered by other nations mean anything at all to us."

Youngsters Exhibit 290 Pigs

Fourteen banks in Lee County, Iowa, recently co-operated with the Breeders' Association in conducting a boys' and girls' club rally. The boys and girls brought in the best pigs that they were raising and exhibited them for $150 in cash prizes which the banks contributed.

Quincy, Illinois, bankers are offering pure bred boars and high grade seed corn to the value of $500 to farmers who attend the Adams County Fair. These prizes will be distributed by lot to farmers of each township, the amount to be based on the township attendance at the fair.

The Missouri Bankers Association inter-county contest for boys' and girls' clubs is the result of action taken at the annual convention, when $1,600 was provided for premiums. The premiums, not less than $25 each, are to be awarded to counties to pay the expenses of club winners to junior farmers' week at the Missouri College of Agriculture; $100 is to be used to pay the expenses of the state champion demonstration team to the meeting of the Bankers Association, where the team will present its winning demonstration.

To produce Land O' Lakes quality everything should be kept clean and all utensils must be scalded well. Cool the cream quickly in water, the year around, stirring while cooling. To deliver cream often is very important. If you live far from town you should club together with your neighbors. You dont realize what a difference there is in making butter from cream delivered 2 times a week, and cream delivered weekly— even tho your week old cream is sweet. Let us get into the Land O' Lakes class and we shall be well paid for it.

MOST IMPORTANT NEWS OF WORLD

Big Happenings of the Week Condensed for the Benefit of Busy Readers.

Washington

Washington — President Coolidge signed the treasury-postoffice appropriation bill carrying $760,000,000, the largest amount ever provided during peace time in a single piece of legislation.

Washington—Knowledge of a letter in which he was said to have advised F. R. Lee, chairman of the federation shop craft of the Wabash Railway Company that the executive council of the American Federation of Labor had decided to terminate the railroad shopmen's strike was denied.

Washington—A bill to promote production and conservation of helium gas by the government was passed by the house. The measure contemplates acquisition of the gas especially for use of the army and navy and to storage of a reserve supply. Export of the gas would be prohibited.

Washington—The senate rejected an amendment to the naval appropriation bill by Senator W. H. King (dem. Utah), proposing to withhold funds to maintain the marines in Haiti. Senator T. L. Oddie (rep., Nev.), a member of the congressional commission which investigated conditions in Haiti two years ago, said that Senator King was misinformed both as to the purpose and the execution of American intervention.

Domestic

Wilkesbarre, Pa.—There will be no general strike of the mine workers of District No. 1 in sympathy with the 11,000 men now out in the Pittston section, it was decided at a meeting of the general grievance committees here.

Bradenton, Fla. — Harold Gates, traveling salesman of Tampa, was killed here in a pistol duel with J. J. Lamb, real estate dealer. The shooting followed an argument in front of a grammar school over the custody of an 11 year old son of Mrs. Lamb.

Fairbanks, Alaska — Intense cold, which started Saturday, caused the United States postoffice here to close. Heating facilities were inadequate to keep the fingers of clerks warm enough to distribute mail. Thermometers registered 65 below zero, breaking all records in this district.

New York—The typhoid epidemic which threatened to reach alarming proportions in New York two weeks ago virtually has passed, Frank J. Monaghan, health commissioner announced. During the height of the epidemic as many as 49 new cases were reported for one day.

Mobile, Ala.—Signals from England and France were picked up on a wave length of 90 meters at Station 5-AC here. Stations heard were English 2-SZ and French 8-SSC. The signals from the French stations were heard all over a big room on a twostep amplifier.

Galesburg, Ill.—Retroactive from Sept. 1, 1924, engineers, firemen and hostlers for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad system, are to receive an increase in pay, according to announcement made here by Mannie Larson, general chairman of The Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

New York—The state athletic commission at its meeting decided to conduct a lightweight championship elimination tournament under similar conditions to those which governed the recent featherweight title tournament, provided a suitable response is received to invitations the board will extend to all boxing centers without delay.

Topeka, Kan.—Former Governor Jonathan M. Davis and his son, Russell, charged with soliciting and accepting a bribe in exchange for a pardon for a convict, waived preliminary hearing in the City Court. Unless a special agreement is reached for an early trial, their case will come up on the regular docket of the April term of District Court.

Austin—The first step to set aside the impeachment of former Governor James E. Ferguson was taken in the state senate. A resolution introduced by J. Roy Hardin of Kaufman recited that the results of the election in November indicated it was "the sense of the people of Texas that the Ferguson name be vindicated," and that "all disqualifications incident to the impeachment be removed."

Boston—F. E. Wiggins of London, inspector of line commissaries of the Guatemalan division of the United Fruit Company, was killed on Sioux farm, Guatelmala, by six robbers, the office of the company here has announced. He had been inspecting commissaries and was returning to headquarters with $2,000 when six men armed with rifles waylaid and shot him, escaping with the money.

Manila—The United States destroyers Tracy, Smith Thompson and John D. Edwards of the Asiatic fleet left for Shanghai as a result of the fighting reported there between rival Chinese factions. Other warships are under orders to proceed to the district in the event of their services being required there.

Chicago—The 90 foot power yacht, the Speejacks, in which Albert Y. Gowan and his wife, now divorced, made a trip around the world, has been sold to Philip Wrigley, son of William Wrigley, Jr., it was announced here.

Richmond, Va.—Twenty-five thousand persons are jobless, packing houses have closed and approximately $15,000,000 already has been lost as a result of the virtual paralysis of the oyster industry in Virginia, due to the typhoid scare, W. McDonald Lee, commissioner of fisheries, announced here.

Sports

New York — Paavo Nurmi, the great Finn, won two races and set three new records on his first appearance in Madison Square Garden, New York.

Minneapolis—William H. Spaulding, for three years head football coach at the University of Minnesota, was re-engaged for a period of two years by the board of regents at its regular meeting.

New York — Legal investigation which may lead to grand jury action in the Dolan-O'Connell bribery scandal was launched by District Attorney Banton of New York upon receipt of all the evidence gathered in the case of Baseball Commissioner Landis. At the same time, Commissioner Landis pledged his readiness to co-operate with the district attorney in obtaining witnesses or in any other way, thus, since his authority over the national game virtually is supreme, putting baseball's entire machinery at the disposal of the investigation.

Foreign

Manila—Representatives of the Radio Corporation of America announced that plans have been virtually completed for the erection of a super-radio station at Manila. The project will involve an outlay of $4,000,000, it is said.

Stockholm—King Gustav has appointed Frederick Thorsson, successor to Premier Hjalmar Branting, Mr. Branting has been ill for a considerable time and is not expected to recover. Mr. Thorsson is a former shoemaker.

Paris—Possible abandonment by the French government, at the request of the Spanish government, of the prosecution of Vicente Blasco Ibanez, the Spanish author, for his attacks in French territory on King Alfonso and the Spanish military directorate was forecast in French parliamentary circles late today.

Honolulu—Smouldering indignation in the ranks of Filipino strikers broke out anew on the island of Hawaii today when 2,000 strikers marched to a plantation where fellow workers were employed and demanded that they join in the strike. Two plantation workers' officials were badly beaten. The disturbance was quelled by police.

London—Interest aroused in the United States in the project undertaken by the dean and chapter of St. Paul's to safeguard the cathedral for generations to come has led to their making an appeal not only to the British empire, but to Anglo-Saxons in the United States and elsewhere, to assist in preserving the memorial, threatened by crumbling inside the massive piers which support the famous dome.

Tokio—Ambassador Matsudaira, responding to a toast at a dinner to the American ambassador to Japan, Edgar A. Bancroft, expressed confidence in the success of his mission in Japan, stating he would be inspired by the universal desire of the Japanese for "peace." He said the Japanese sentiment, of which he was representative, was the same now as at the time of the Washington conference—"not competition but cooperation."

Paris—The body of Edward Lea Clark, a young American whose threat five weeks ago to commit suicide because of an unrequited love affair, was little credited by his companions in Paris, has been taken from the Moselle river at Nancy. Clark, whose home is said to have been in New York state, was a rising employee of a steamship company in Paris, though he had small debts here and there about Paris, was not financially embarrassed.

Paris—Both France and Germany are disputing the United States' claim to possess the most powerful and the fastest locomotives in the world. The Eprenay shops in France have turned out an engine capable of hauling a train of 800 tons at the rate of 120 kilometers (roughly 75 miles) an hour over a six hour division without stopping. This engine is considered more powerful than the German locomotive completed at the Breslau works which hauls a 600 ton train at 90 kilometers an hour.

Toulon, France—The horticulturists of southern France are planning a monster demonstration here soon in protest against the reported decision of the United States government to forbid the importation of French flower bulbs. The privilege of exporting granted by the American secretary of agriculture in December 1922 expires on December 31 next, and the narcissus, tulip and hyacinth growers of the Riviera are urging the representatives in the French parliament to get the ban rescinded. Otherwise they say they will be faced with ruin and hundreds of workers will be made idle

London—The crossword puzzle craze has extended to Sandringham, where it is stated that Queen Mary has taken up the pastime of solving the problems published by the newspapers. The lesser members of the royal family are also addicted to the word hunting game. Word problems are not new to Queen Mary. In her younger days she spent much time solving acrostics and composing others for her attendants.

Moscow—Fifty men had been frozen to death in a blizzard of unusual ferocity in the Caucasus. Thousands of cattle perished

BILLS DRAFTED TO REGULATE BUSSES

Measure Would Give Rail Commission Power to Control Lines and Adjust Rates.

St. Paul — Regulation of motor busses of the state would be placed under the State Railroad and Warehouse commission under the provisions of a bill introduced.

The bill does not deal with the question of taxation of the busses, but merely provides for the regulation of the companies.

Under the bill no company would be entitled to operate a bus line without getting from the Railroad and Warehouse commission a certificate that public convenience and necessity require such a line.

The bill provides that each company must file a schedule of its rates with the commission. If the commission should feel that the rates are unreasonable, it would have power to prescribe reasonable rates after a public hearing. Rates could not be changed without sanction of the commission.

The commission would have full power of regulating the companies. Taxation of the motor busses, another important question to be threshed out this session, is to be cared for in other bills.

HIGHWAY ISSUE IS IMPORTANT

Christianson and Babcock Widely Different View Must Be Settled.

St. Paul—The Minnesota Legislature must choose at this session which of two theories of eocnomy is to be followed in forming the state's highway program.

One theory was submitted by Governor Christianson in his inaugural message. He admonished the Legislature to go no faster on the road building program during the next two years than in the past. By so saying he urged a reduction of motor vehicle taxes which would put in the pockets of car owners the amount of money that is expected to be raised by a gasoline tax. He said there should be no issuance of bonds.

Charles M. Babcock, state highway commissioner, set forth his theory of economy in his biennial report to Governor Christianson. Mr. Babcock asked for the present schedule of automobile taxes, the gasoline tax revenue in addition, and on top of both a $20,000,000 bond issue. His theory is that the state, by an intensive road building policy instituted at once, can so cut down the present excessive maintenance costs that there will be a real saving in the long run.

SENATE GETS EUGENICS BILL

Requires Physician's Certificate Before License Is Granted.

Efforts to restrict marriage to persons physically and mentally fit will be made in the legislature this session.

Senator William C. Zamboni introduced a bill in the state senate requiring a physician's certificate before a person may be granted a marriage license. Another bill, now in preparation, would establish a state board of eugenics to prevent marriage of persons who are "insane, epileptic, or to some degree feble minded."

The Zamboni bill provides that any person seeking a marriage license must hand the license clerk a physician's certificate testifying as to physical and mental fitness.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Madelia—Enough stock was subscribed at a meeting of business men, and farmers of this community to assure a new creamery building. About $10,000 will be needed.

Owatonna—A part time evening school in agriculture will be offered by the Owatonna high school this winter under the supervision of F. E. Moore, instructor of agriculture here.

Little Falls—Utsala, a little town near here, is without telehpones, as the result of a fire which destroyed the exchange and hardware.

Elk River—Mrs. W. P. Rhoda of this village died at a Minneapolis hospital as the result of injuries suffered in an automobile-sleigh collision here in which four others were hurt.

Owatonna—The First Universalist Church Society has pledged $1,000 to the Kate Symes Home for Aged Men and Women of Steele county on the conditions that additional $20,000 be raised by public subscription.

Faribault—The Southern Minnesota Traffic Association was perfected here, with Thomas Cashman of Owatonna at its head. The organization embraces a number of prominent southern Minnesota cities, united to study and work for adjustment of freight rates.

Fairmont—An organized band of farm robbers, who travel in trucks are sought by Martin county authorities following the looting of several farms in this vicinity.

Ostrander—The new $30,000 Community Hall was opened by a banquet and dance in which visitors from many of the surrounding towns took part.

Belle Plaine—A movement has been launched by the Community club to secure community co-operation in a plan to erect a city hospital. A committee has been appointed to promote the undertaking.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Would Establish State-Owned Printing Plant.

St. Paul—Creation of a state printing commission, an exofficio body, to have charge of the printing and distribution of text-books for Minnesota's public schools, is proposed in a bill in the lower house of the legislature by Representative Frank T. Starkey, of St. Paul. Another bill, ready for introduction by Mr. Starkey, proposes establishment of a state owned printing plant to provide the state's printed materials.

A bill is being drafted for early introduction into the legislature providing one day rest in seven, to substitute for the enactment of the last legislature which was declared unconstitutional in a test in the state's courts. The bill is being drafted by the Minnesota State Federation of Labor. According to Mr. Starkey it will be more specific in its provisions for exceptions and remove some of the inconsistencies pointed out by the courts.

Farmer-labor members will make a fight at the session to revise the drainage laws, which they contend are working an injustice, particularly to northern Minnesota farmers. Assessments, they hold, have become so burdensome that they are in reality confiscation. Two years ago a law, known as the Enstrom act, delayed payment of assessments. The proposal now is to bring permanent relief and modify operation of the law in the future. A superpower bill, sponsored by Representative S. A. Stockwell, of Minneapolis, is to have support of the minority members, discussion at the caucus showed. This bill withdraws from sale all remaining power sites and ultimately would enable the state to produce and dispose of power.

A bill to permit the use of certified food colors in the manufacture and sale of food products, in Minnesota has been introduced in the state Legislature by Senator William C. Zamboni of Owatonna. Minnesota is the only state in the union whose food laws prohibit the use of certified colors, Senator Zamboni declares.

A proposal that the Legislature enact a law which would require the three grain trading organizations of Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth, to report to the Railroad and Warehouse commission daily the number of cars of grain brought into their respective markets for sale, and the disposition made of them, was made by Representative Otto Neuman of the Minnesota House of Representatives.

TO PLUG BLUE SKY LAW GAPS

New Measure Offered to Take Place of Securities Statutes.

St. Paul—A bill intended to plug up all the gaps in the Blue Sky laws through which securities of doubtful worth now reach Minnesota investors is before the state Legislature.

The measure is a substitute for all statutes which now govern the functioning of the State Securities commission. It rectifies obstacles in the present laws which the commission has encountered in recent years.

The bill was introduced in the Senate last week by Senator J. D. Sullivan of St. Cloud and it will be presented in the House Monday by Representative A. S. Pearson of St. Paul. It was drawn by members of the securities commission, who declare that they put into it the fruits of the commission's experiences of the last seven and a half years.

ASK PUBLIC HUNTING GROUND

Hausler Measure Would Set Aside State-Owned Tracts.

St. Paul—A bill authorizing the state game and fish commissioner to establish public hunting grounds in Minnesota was introduced in the Senate of the Legislature by Senator C. A. Haules. Under the bill the commissioners would be empowered to set aside portions of state-owned lands for to acquire suitable lands for the hunting grounds. One-third of each area, loctaer in the center of the tract, would be disignated as a game refuge, while the area surrounding would be devoted to the shooting grounds.

Indian Relief Asked.

Relief for Indian tribes of the state was requested in a joint resolution, submitted in the Senate and House. The resolution urges Congress to legislate for the aid of the Indian tribes in Minnesota and favors the prompt distribution of money to meet the immediate needs of the tribesmen.

St. Paul — Increased appropriation for the State Game and Fish department aggregating approximately $1,500,000 for the next two years is requested in the budget prepared for consideration of the Legislature by J. F. Gould, commissioner, so that the department can expand its work of wild life conservation and propagation.

Long Prairie—The Long Prairie river is frozen solid for the first time in the record, and all fish and minnows have been killed.

Fergus Falls—Mr. and Mrs. Leeman Loop, pioneer residents of this county, have just celebrated their 58th wedding anniversary at their home near Campbell.

Duluth—Minnesota's mine royalties tax law, passed by the Legislature in 1923, was upheld as constitutional in a decision handed down by Federal Judge W. A. Cant. Approximately $1,000,000 in taxes will be made available under the law.

GUARANTY FUNDS IN GOOD ORDER

All Disbursements Are Consistent And Properly Authorized.

Bismarck, N. D.—"In our opinion the depositors' guaranty fund has been properly accounted for on its records, and all disbursements are consistent and in order and properly authorized and authenticated."

This is the statement made by the Temple, Brissman company, certified public accountants at the conclusion of their audit report of the depositors guaranty fund made as of October 31, 1924.

The report shows that on October 31, last, the amount available for the purpose for which the fund was created was $806,898.24. This is exclusive of $204,611 due from closed banks in the state on deposits and assessments.

No figures are given, however, as to the total liabilities of the fund to depositors in closed banks, this being beyond the provision of the examination.

The total expenses of the commission since its inception in 1917 to the date of the audit was $78,801.19. Of this $37,849.79 has been paid from legislative appropriation and the remaining $40,952 from the assessment fund.

On October 31, 1924, the commission had on deposit in closed banks $112,966.29. A supplementary report shows that since the date of the audit $18,901.55 has been withdrawn. These deposits are divided among 16 closed institutions, the largest amount in any one bank being $21,398.99 in the defunct Williams County State bank at Williston.

There was also $21,515.26 on deposit in banks which were on the special deposit list on October 31, but of this $15,773.88 has been withdrawn since that date.

Money in Closed Banks.

Closed banks which still hold deposits of the guaranty fund are the Clyde State bank, Bank of Cogswell, Farmers Bank of Dunn County, Dunn Center; Farmers State bank of East Fairview; Sawyer State bank, Williston State bank, Farmers Bank of Garrison, State bank of Grenora, Farmers bank, Hampden; Security State bank of Hanks, State bank of Maxbass, Farmers State bank of Nome, Farmers State bank of Rawson, Farmers bank of Ray, Farmers and Merchants State bank of Sherwood, Tolley State bank, Farmers State bank of Watford City, Williams County State bank of Williston.

DEBT PAYMENT HOLDS STAGE

American Could Not Repay Such an Obligation, Says Frenchmen.

Paris—Discussion of France's debt to the United States, brought to a head by Deputy Marin's speech in the chamber last week, continues unabated. Louis Locheur, one of the negotiators of the Versailles treaty, moved by Senator Borah's reply to Deputy Marin's address, is quoted by the Excelsior as saying:

"I never contested our debt to America. I did say that it seemed impossible, physically and materially, that France could reimburse the whole of that debt.

"I defy America herself to reimburse a sum of $3,000,000,000. She would be incapable and the United States financial situation is much more solid than ours."

Alazandre Varenne, Socialist, president of the senate, told Excelsior:

"Senator Borah pretends that the American taxpayer is more heavily burdened than the French. I maintain that the French taxpayer is more heavily assessed than the German. The problem of inter-Allied debts would make a big step forward if America employed her whole energy in making Germany pay."

Recommend Passage of Bill.

Bismarck, N. D.—The senate state affairs committee, meeting in its second session just prior to Monday's legislative session, voted to recommend for passage the bill providing for cigaret license and stamp tax plan, with an amendment that declares a place of business where cigarets are sold in violation of the act, a public nuisance. Courts are given no discretion in declaring such places nuisances, with injunctional provisions of liquor act applied to them.

Farm Body Reports.

Washington.—Members of President Coolidge's agricultural commission have completed and presented to the executive another section of their report. This section was described as containing all of the legislative suggestions the commission would have to make for this session of congress. The president, after study of the report, is expected to transmit the recommendations to congress.

Washington.—The senate Monday recommitted to the judiciary committee of Attorney General Stone to be a supreme court judge. The action was taken after an hour's discussion in executive session, and had the approval of the administration leaders who have conferred with President Coolidge. It is probable that Mr. Stone will appear before the committee to make a statement with reference to the action of the justice department in seeking a second indictment aginst Senator Wheeler, Democrat, Montana, in the District of Columbia.

AN OPERATION RECOMMENDED

Avoided by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Los Angeles, Cal.—"I cannot give too much praise to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for what it has done for me. My mother gave it to me when I was a girl 14 years old, and since then I have taken it when I feel run down or tired. I took it for three months before my two babies were born for I suffered with my back and had spells as if my heart was affected, and it helped me a lot. The doctors told me at one time that I would have to have an operation. I thought I would try 'Pinkham's,' as I call it, first. In two months I was all right and had no operation. I firmly believe 'Pinkham's' cured me. Everyone who saw me after that remarked that I looked so well. I only have to take medicine occasionally, not but I always keep a couple of bottles by me. I recommend it to women who speak to me about their health. I have also used your Sanative Wash and like it very much." — Mrs. E. GOULD, 4000 East Side Boulevard, Los Angeles, Cal.

Many letters have been received from women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after operations have been advised.

Dancers Emulate Animals

Not everybody who "fox-trots" knows why that particular dance movement is so called. It originated in the United States, and is supposed to be descriptive of the fox in search of his prey, and it was from the fancied similarity of the dance steps that the fox-trot took its name. The dance is really a much-altered descendant of the old polka which also originated in America, and which had already led to quite a number of new steps, christened aften animals which they were supposed to imitate—as, for instance, the bunny hug and the turkey trot.

"I shall skip nothing. The woman I was to have married left me the evening before, and disappeared with another man. Had he been free to marry her she would have had no need to escape in secrecy. I gave up my work. I hunted them through the Southern states. My mind was obsessed with the idea of redeeming my honor. If I had found them I should have killed him. They knew it, and they fled before me. I gave them no rest. For five years I pursued them, running down every clue."

"You'll permit me to correct your memory on that point, John," said Lawson suavely. "For five years you wandered among tramps and hoboes, to the scandal of your former friends, thinking that you were looking for your fiancee, but actually doing your searching in morphine visions. Such delusions of phenomenal activity are a recognized symptom of your disease. De Quincey imagined that he visited every corner of the earth while lying at home in an opium stupor."

"I never touched morphine until you gave it to me," said Lancaster.

"That delusion is part of your disease. No, John, you may have searched the suburban districts of Avonmouth, but you can't have gone far, because every few months you would turn up at the institute, looking shabbier and more disreputable on each occasion, and more and more morphine soaked. And every time I tried to set you up and help you. I was sorry for you, and you knew it and traded upon my pity; I was shamed by you, and you knew that and traded upon my shame."

Lancaster hung his head; Joan laid her hand lightly on his, and after that he continued to return Lawson's gaze steadfastly.

"I went to you, Jim Lawson," he said, "because I had placed you in charge of the institute when I elected to head the other branch of the trust fund, the Avonmouth hospital. I had given you the charge here because you were—"

"Your illegitimate half-brother," said Lawson bluntly. "We are not mincing our words. Because you robbed me of my own birthright as your elder brother, by reason of the fact that my mother was not legally married to our father. Yes, go on."

"At last, Joan, I was broken down completely," continued Lancaster. "It was a monomania, that search of mine, as I came to understand afterward, a perverted pride that had eaten into my heart and left no place for other thoughts. But I did not become addicted to morphine until this man urged it upon me, under the guise of medical care. And even then I could have broken off the habit at any time, but I had no heart to, and it gave me relief from thoughts that tortured me."

"So they all think," said Lawson.

"It was he who told me that I could never break it off, who urged me to continue the use of it with sophistical arguments which I had not the energy to oppose. I had been five years away from Avonmouth. The people at the Southern hospital believed me dead, and I did not undeceive them. I never meant to return. When I came here it was always by night, to this man whom I believed to be my friend, to avoid shaming our name in the eyes of Millville. Thus none ever saw us together, and Lawson and I resembled each other as much as we do today."

"More, I hope, John," sneered the other. "The life one leads tells as the years go by."

"Nobody in these parts had seen me since I was a boy. I had left home young, and studied at Johns Hopkins and abroad. Lawson had taken my name. The old neighbors had gone away, and if any of the country folks have long memories, they have close tongues, too. The matron and Jenkins are both newcomers. I had passed out of memory.

"This devil saw his chance and grasped at it," he went on with sudden vehemence. "Here was the famous Doctor Lancaster, a broken man, an outcast, and believed in Avonmouth to be long since dead. And here was the Lancaster known to Millville and Lancaster village, at the head of this institute. Why shouldn't he get me to take his place here while he went to Avonmouth and claimed to be I? Lawson was ambitious. He wanted to be something bigger than the superintendent of a little hill institute. And he wanted to get his fingers on the trust fund at Avonmouth. Do I wrong you?" he demanded, turning fiercely upon the other.

"Not in the least; you honor me," said Lawson, with a suave bow. "I wanted to take the fund out of your worthless supervision and devote it to proper uses."

"This must be stopped!" shouted Myers, with a sudden interposition. "Doctor Lancaster, you are saying things that you will regret tomorrow. You are turning to bite the hand that fed you. Where would you be today save for Doctor Lawson? A dead man in a pauper's grave!"

"He persuaded me, weakened as I was by morphine with which he had been dosing me," Lancaster resumed, without paying the least attention to the secretary. "He was to take my place in Avonmouth, while I could assume charge here, pretend to have an illness, which would account for any change in my aspect and character. Nobody would know the difference, and nobody has known the difference. Here, he told me, I could be free to brood over my unhappy life, while he, the clever schemer, taking up my past, could adapt it to his own. He convinced me."

Joan gasped as she began to understand the enormity of the crime. And it was true: she could read that truth in Lawson's face, his pride in the exploit. Lawson was actually smirking, as he had smirked in the operating theater.

"I consented, and he went away," said Lancaster. "My recollection of the months that followed is necessarily a dim one. I know, however, that I was in no state to take care of the funds. They disappeared, and I was accused of having embezzled them. If I did that I did it in my dreams."

"That's just the trouble with you, John," said Lawson. "You dream too much. The question is, what did you do with them? Bury them? You can't have spent thirty thousand dollars upon morphine."

"I have accepted and borne the burden of the guilt," cried Lancaster. "This man Myers was placed in charge. Thereafter he was ever at my elbow, urging me upon the downward path. When I would make an effort to break off my habit he would whisper to me that my life was ruined, that the charge of embezzlement would be pressed if ever I returned to Avonmouth. He would advise me to take my drug and forget—"

"You are lying, you dreamer!" yelled the secretary. "You lie, and you know it!"

"When you came, Joan, I was all but hopeless. I had caught at your aid as my last hope, because that day you came to me your face looked good, and strong, too, and you spoke so sincerely, and it was years since I had known anyone like you. And you seemed to have been sent to me."

"Religious hallucination," said Lawson, tapping his forehead significantly. Nevertheless, Joan could see that he was growing uneasy as the plot was unraveled.

"It was a miracle, that meeting, one of those chances that seem reserved to uncover such conspiracies. For, though this man had stolen my name"—and here a touch of pride was visible on Lancaster's face—"there was one thing he could not do. He could not perform the Lancaster operation, though he had picked my brains during the weeks in which he kept me here, a prisoner in one room. And so, from time to time, he compelled me to go to Avonmouth, under the charge of Myers, in order to operate. He laid down the regulations: I was to dress and mask alone; I was to speak as little as possible and to leave hastily after I had finished my work. And he always sent me there with a full injection of the drug in my body. I was too weak to resist too much under the thumb of Myers here."

"Doctor, won't you stop this painful recitation of hallucinations?" pleaded the secretary to Lawson. "You know, tomorrow he will retract everything."

"The day came," continued Lancaster, "when a committee of visiting surgeons was to witness the operation. He thought that he had learned it. His vanity led him to go to the hospital in person, after he had brought me to Avonmouth. The patient died, but he alone was responsible for that. And that is where you come into the case, Joan. I managed to get word with you, and Myers followed you to this institute, in order to forestall me if possible."

"Doctor Lancaster, you did not steal the funds," said Joan calmly. "Do you not see the hold these two men have managed to obtain over you? They stole the funds, and their object in drugging you was to get rid of you, the sole evidence of their crime, by your death. And so, not daring to murder you, they planned that you should commit suicide."

"You'll answer for that!" shouted the secretary, white with rage.

Lancaster shrugged his sholders. "It doesn't matter now, my dear," he said.

But he had struck Lawson through his triple hide of vanity at last.

"But that isn't all," shouted the man. "Admit that there may be a substratum of truth in these morphine dreams of yours, John Lancaster. Admit that I was ambitious, and that I did take the place my half-brother had forfeited in order to be of use to the world, and in order to save you from a felon's cell or a maniac's grave. Acknowledge that I did impersonate you tonight, as before, that I came back with Myers in order to get rid of this girl who threatened to disrupt the institute and put a drug drunkard in the office I hold. Well, what then? That isn't all the story.

"You have played your miserable game craftily, John Lancaster, after having made a fair agreement with me. But I've done my duty toward you and our father's fund, and if he were alive he would thank me for it. And as for this girl, she can go, and, if her ravings receive credence anywhere, I'll face a jury and tell the truth fearlessly.

"But you haven't explained everything to your poor dupe, John. You haven't told her where your sweetheart is. You haven't said that all the while you have been making love to her your fiancee is under this roof, hopelessly insane, that she came back in her madness, and that you took her into the institute and cared for her when her own people had discarded her, because you still loved her. And I'll tell you something, John. I brought her back; I was in touch with her from first to last; and I brought her here as an additional lure to keep you at the institute after I had gone to Avonmouth. Just tell Miss Wentworth who Mrs. Dana is."

Joan's eyes met Lancaster's, and she saw in his the supreme moment of his anguish. She braced herself to meet the shock; she told herself that Lancaster no longer cared for his poor charge. She faced Lawson and Myers unflinchingly. But the spring of hope that had been bubbling in her heart seemed to have gone dry.

Lawson seemed to be animated by some infernal deviltry. He seemed to be throwing off the mask he had assumed; he leaned forward and shook his finger in Lancaster's face.

"And there's another thing, John," he said. "You remember that when we were boys together I resented the difference between your position and mine. Because of a few written words upon a legal document you, the younger, were the honored heir of John Lancaster, Sr., living in the big house on the estate, while I was the unacknowledged child, the shame of my poor mother, ostracized even by the meaner whites of the district. Your friends pretended not to know who I was when they rode by."

Lancaster made a gesture of deprecation as Lawson's voice shook with passion. "That's true, Jim," he said, "but can you blame me? Did I not give you the position here?"

"I hated you because of that, John," resumed Lawson. "I hated you, and I vowed some day to turn the tables on you. I wanted to be a surgeon. What a struggle I had, working my way through Johns Hopkins, while you were spending your father's money there! The struggle soured me, John. And once, do you remember, I was operating on a rabbit under curare, which had paralyzed the motor nerves and left the beast to suffer? It was an experiment such as I had often thought I should like to make on you, and you flung a vile word at me and killed the creature. I told you then that I would get even with you some day. The time arrived. I got my own back, and more, but there is one thing that I never told you. Your fiancee was the victim of a misunderstanding. There was no other man."

John Lancaster's deep breathing seemed the only sound in the room; and, as if galvanized into full strength, he stood now like a panther, poised for a leap, every muscle grown taut, and his eyes gleaming. Joan, paralyzed by the sudden unleashing of Lawson's venomous revenge, could not utter a word.

Lancaster spoke. "You said you were in touch with her and brought her here after she became insane," he said. "How did you do it?"

"You have had your full say, John Lancaster," replied Lawson, "and now I am going to have mine. Under the delusion that your intention was to elope with her, on the day before that fixed for the marriage in the parish church—a romantic plan to evade the family and curious neighbors—Miss Reid went to Savannah, to meet you there. I needn't go into details of the trap that your unacknowledged enemy set for you, but when she learned that she had been tricked it was too late to return. Her life was ruined, John; and it was I, impersonating you, who sent her there."

Americans Accorded Honors by British

The first native American to be knighted by an English monarch was Sir William Pepperell, who was born in Kittery, Maine, June 27, 1696. His father was a Welshman who came to New England as an apprentice to a fisherman. The son became a merchant and amassed a large fortune. As a military leader he took part in several conflicts with the Indians and attained much distinction. For thirty-two years he was a member of the royal council of Massachusetts, and as chief justice of common pleas he won eminence as a jurist.

Since Pepperell's time many Americans have achieved knighthood and higher British honors. Lord Astor and Lord Shaughnessy, the former a native of New York and the latter of Milwaukee, being among the more prominent latter-day examples.

Your doctor advises internal cleanliness

HE WILL tell you that the first results of constipation — headache, sleepless nights, biliousness, backache, etc.—warn that the body is flooded with intestinal poisons. In time these poisons may cause the breakdown of health and lead to serious disease.

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Why Physicians Favour Lubrication

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. For sale by all druggists.

Christian Science Temple

The original cost of the land on which the mother church of Boston, Christian Science, was built (gift of Mrs. Eddy) was $20,000. The cost of the original edifice was $200,000, including the organ, which cost $10,000. The estimated present value of the lot, with its extension, is $150,000, and the cost of the temple extension $2,000,000. Its seating capacity is 5,000 and it was dedicated in 1906.

Beautiful Spot Filmed

Africa's mystery mountain, Kilimanjaro, in Tanganyika, has been filmed by a British explorer. Kilimanjaro has two peaks—Kibo rising to 19,710 feet and Mawauzi to 17,570 feet. Its great ice cap—in some places over 200 feet thick completely covering the last 5,000 feet of its altitude, is the most striking feature of the film. This mile of ice, under moonlight, acts as a giant reflector creating one of the most extraordinary and beautiful natural phenomena in the world. To reach the mountain, 5,000 miles had to be traveled on foot, animal transports being impossible because of the frequent belts of tsetse flies which were encountered.

Miss Elma Udstrand went to Donaldson on Monday for a couple of weeks visit with her sister, Mrs Zacharius. She will also visit with friends at Thief River Falls and at Warren, on the way there.

We received an interesting letter from Oscar Hanson last week in which he stated they were well located in a fine neighborhood and like their home very much. He speaks highly of the country around there and also of the hustling town of Mahnomen near which they are located. He sends greetings to all his old friends.

Members of the Minnesota Potato Growers Exchange began receiving their first pool checks last week.

The first payments are as follows: 8c per cwt. on mixed varieties. 10c per cwt. on Red River Ohios and Cobblers. 12c on Triumphs and Russet Burbanks. 20c per cwt. on Certified Seed Stock.

This schedule is based on the market value of the various kinds of potatoes. Other pool payments will be made as quickly as current sales will permit.

BANKER-FARMER MEETING NOTES

A conference of bankers and farmers of the Fifth Federal Reserve District held recently at Raleigh, North Carolina, under the auspices of the American Bankers Association Agricultural Commission, adopted the following principles:

"In order to encourage and promote a safe, sane and constructive system of farm practices, the Banker and Farmer Conference of the Fifth Federal Reserve District would make the following recommendations with reference to the activities of farmers and bankers on which to concentrate efforts during the coming year:

"1. Encouragement of loans by bankers to bright and deserving young men and young women who wish to go to college to study agriculture and home economics.

"2. Promote in a rational and conservative way the economic increase in the productiveness of the soils of the district so that a larger unit of crop production may be secured. Small unit yields of necessity are expensive while moderate to large yields of crops are generally the cheapest. Larger yields per acre coupled with a reduction in the acreage, when advisable, should and usually will be more profitable and when handled properly will not lead to an over-production.

"3. Encouragement of a proper system of diversified farming in which farmers will grow as far as practical all the food and feed crops necessary for feeding the family and livestock of the farm, and to keep on the farms the requisite kinds and amounts of livestock best to meet the economic needs of farming.

"4. To formulate and put in motion definite plans for carrying out this program, it is urged that the Agricultural College of the District put a county agent in every county and that a banker-farmer conference be called to meet early in the fall at the agricultural college of each State."

NATION'S SAVINGS PLANT TRIPLED

Savings banks and banks having distinct savings departments, not counting branches, have grown in numbers in the United States from 5,376 in 1912 to 16,709 in 1922 or an increase of about 210 per cent in ten years, says the Savings Bank Division of the American Bankers Association. Savings deposits, it is pointed out, now comprise about one-half of all bank deposits of every description.

WHAT ADVERTISING DOES

America has the best life on this earth because it has the best advertised life, says Colonel W. G. Edens of the Public Relations Commission, American Bankers Association. He goes on: "American health is the best in the world because American people are best informed in the ways and habits of health, largely through advertising. American business is the largest and most successful in the world because it uses advertising the most. American business men enlarge their business institutions in proportion as they advertise them. American buyers become more shrewd in spending their money in proportion as they read advertisements.

"The press of the United States is regarded by many as the most powerful of our institutions. It must be numbered with the schools and the churches as one of the trinity of most powerful creators of knowledge and patriotism.

"Advertising is what it is today largely because of the power and success of the daily paper. Nevertheless, it is true that the daily paper is as successful as it is today because of advertising.

"The banking business has been benefited largely by advertising within the last dozen or fifteen years. Banking institutions have done more advertising than ever before. They have installed advertising departments which acquaint their communities with facts formerly regarded in the light of institutional secrets. The banker publishes facts which build up confidence in his institution.

"The result has been that millions of people who formerly would not place their money in the care of bankers, but who hoarded it at home, entrusted it to friends, or invested it in wildcat speculations, now regard the bank as the safest place in the world. Hundreds of millions of dollars have been brought from their hiding places and placed in circulation, much to the advance of America and American institutions, as well as American business. Newspaper advertising has done more for American banks in the last dozen years than any other single agency."

TRUST COMPANY GROWTH

Nearly fourteen and one-half billions of dollars are the total present resources of trust companies in the United States. Institutions reporting number 2,478, as compared with 2,372 a year ago. The actual figures for the year ending June 30 last are $14,441,500,000 resources, as compared with $12,739,600,000 in 1922, representing a gain of $1,701,900,000.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage containing a Power of Sale, by reason of which default said Power of Sale has become operative, and the Assignee of the Mortgagee hereinafter named is authorized to declare the whole sum due and it hereby does declare said sum due, which mortgage was executed by John M. Jahr and Hannah Jahr, his wife, Mortgagors, to Deposit Bank of Winona, Minnesota, a corporation under the laws of the State of Minnesota, Mortgagee, dated December 27, 1918, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 30th day of January, A. D. 1919, at 9 o'clock A. M., in Book 92 of Mortgages, on page 76,

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Deposit Bank of Winona, Mortgagee, to Deposit Bank and Trust Company, by written assignment, dated July 31st, 1923, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota on the 17th day of December, 1924, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 110 of Mortgages, on page 341.

And whereas, the said Deposit Bank and Trust Company, the assignee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the Power of Sale therein contained: and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two Thousand Dollars ($2 000.00), with accumulated interest from the 27th day of December, 1920, at the rate of six per cent per annum: and, whereas, the said Power of Sale has become operative and no action or proceedings having been instituted at law, or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz:

The Southeast Quarter of Section Thirty-five (35), in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North of Range Forty-two (42) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota.

Which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the Front door of the County Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 17th day of February, 1925, at 10 o'clock A. M., of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the amount then due on said mortgage and interest and all delinquent taxes, if any, on said premises, together with the costs and disbursements of such sale and Fifty Dollars attorney's fees stipulated as attorney's fees in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

We are now selling our butter through the Minnesota Co-Operative Creameries Assn., Inc. and our aim should be to MAKE a Land O' Lakes product.

To produce Land O' Lakes quality everything should be kept clean and all utensils must be scalded well. Cool the cream quickly in water, the year around, stirring while cooling. To deliver cream often is very important. If you live far from town you should club together with your neighbors. You dont realize what a difference there is in making butter from cream delivered 2 times a week, and cream delivered weekly— even tho your week old cream is sweet. Let us get into the Land O' Lakes class and we shall be well paid for it.

The village of Badger has voted—67 to 1 — to issue bonds for $19,000 and to take their electric current from the high line. The electric company agreed to buy the old line from the village.

The editor of a Kansas paper says that after he was thru with a borrowed rifle and started up the street to delivered the weapon to its owner, the delinquent subscribers got it into their heads that he was on the warpath and everyone he met insisted on paying what he owed him. One man wiped out a debt of ten year's standing. On his return to his office he found a load of hay, 15 bushels of corn, 10 bushels of apples, 22 bushels of potatoes, a cord of wood and a barrel of turnips that had been brot in. Explanation of No Lights

Crookston, Minn.
Feb. 3rd '25

The Holt News
Holt, Minn.

Gentlemen:

Our patrons in you town are entitled to an explanation of the power being off three times in the past ten days.

The trouble is in the section of line south of the river and west of Crookston, where the poles are set in gumbo soil. This soil has heaved along this line and the poles are getting out of alignment thus causing the wires to become slack in some spans.

Whenever a south wind strikes these loose spans the wires whip together and kick out the switch.

We have worked continually on this line, but have been handicapped by trying to keep the service on during all week days and do the work only on Sundays.

We have, however, been compelled to do work during daylight hours whenever the line has kicked off and we could not keep the switch closed when the wind was severe.

We will go after this and get the trouble straightened out immediately without waiting to do the work on Sundays as we believe our patrons would be better satisfied to have the outage all at one time rather than strung along day by day, during stormy and dark periods.

We are asking that all of our patrons bear with us in the next few days, during the daylight hours while we give this line a thorough going over.

Yours very truly,
Minnesota Electric Distributing Co.

WEAK, RUN-DOWN NERVOUS, DIZZY

Mrs. Lee Suffered From All These Troubles, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Made Her Well

Terre Haute, Indiana.—"I was weak and run-down and in such a nervous condition that I could hardly do my work. I was tired all the time and dizzy, had no appetite and could not sleep. I tried different medicines for a year but they did not help me. Then my husband saw the ad. for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the newspapers and had me take it. I regained my strength and never felt better in my life. It completely restored me to health. I had practically no suffering when my baby boy was born and he is very strong and healthy. I know that the Vegetable Compound is the best medicine a woman can take before and after childbirth for health and strength. I would be willing to answer letters from women asking about the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. WM. J. LEE, Route E, Box 648, Terre Haute, Indiana.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a dependable medicine for all these troubles.

Chapter XII

—17—

Without a sound Lancaster leaped at him.

Joan saw the secretary snatch up the lamp and hold it on high. She heard his screaming, terrified voice above the uproar. He stood like some squat statue illuminating the space above the dark in which Lancaster and Lawson sprawled, clutching at each other like two primeval cave men.

It was grotesque, for it was like a man fighting with himself; and, in fact, it might have been Lancaster fighting with his evil angel. He was no match for Lawson, but at first his pent-up fury, at last unleashed, matched the two equally. Then Lawson flung his adversary from him and struggled to his knees. As Lancaster grasped him and tried to rise he flung him down again. Lancaster's head struck the corner of the iron bedstead. His hands unclosed; he sighed and lay perfectly still. Joan saw the look of malignant rage upon Lawson's face, saw him raise his heel above the face of the unconscious man. He would have ground out Lancaster's life, but that Joan pulled the revolver from her pocket and thrust it into his face for the second time.

Lawson staggered backward, rage and terror depicted upon his features in the light of the swaying oil lamp. At that moment Myers was crouching near her. He set the lamp down. Joan felt a sharp pain in the upper part of her arm. She saw the secretary putting something into his pocket. He dodged the wavering revolver and backed toward the door, pulling Lawson with him.

"I'm going to finish this!" yelled Lawson.

Myers clutched at him and pulled him into the hall. Joan heard Myers' eager whispers, and Lawson's struggles and angry muttering gradually subside.

Then she heard them enter the secretary's room, and, forgetting them instantly, she bent over Lancaster and raised his head upon her knee.

He was breathing heavily. The blow had only stunned him. Joan tried to lift him upon the bed, but he was too heavy for her. As she was attempting to do so, however, the door opened and Mrs. Fraser came in.

"I found a key," she whispered, trembling. "I heard them fighting. Heaven help me, what has that devil done to the doctor?"

"He isn't badly hurt," said Joan. "Help me get him upon the bed."

Mrs. Fraser and Joan succeeded. Lancaster lay there, still unconscious. The matron clung heavily to the bedstead, looking at Joan piteously.

"I know it all now," she muttered. "I should have known before if I'd listened to the Millville gossip. That devil is his brother."

"Yes," said Joan shortly. "What are you going to do, Mrs. Fraser?"

"I'm going to stand by the doctor," the woman answered. "I stood by him year after year when I thought he was possessed by an evil spirit. Wouldn't I stand by him now?"

"Good," said Joan. "And I, too. Tomorrow we'll make short work of those men."

"Heaven save you, you don't know that man, Miss Wentworth," muttered the matron. "He's a devil. He has no pity. And he has a devil ten times worse than himself."

"Myers? Who is he?"

"He was his assistant here. He was tried once, they tell me, for poisoning his sweetheart. He sent her candy—but they couldn't find any poison in her body. It was his master made the analysis, and he lied to get Myers free and have his hold on him. It's all plain to me now, Miss Wentworth."

"If you knew this," said Joan, "you should have told me; you should have told the police, told anyone rather than let him drug Doctor Lancaster day after day."

"I thought it was the doctor who was in league with him," the matron muttered. "Miss Wentworth, I'm timid, I'm easily frightened, but not another day will I keep silent. Tomorrow—"

"Yes, tomorrow," said Joan. "You'd better go to bed now, Mrs. Fraser. I'll guard the doctor with my revolver, and tomorrow we'll end these years of slavery. Doctor Lancaster is a free man. Think of him as a free man. The past is all behind us."

The matron slipped away stealthily to her room. Joan took her seat beside Lancaster, listening to the incoherent mutterings which had begun. Presently his eyes opened. He stared at her for some minutes until recognition came into them.

"Joan!" he whispered, stretching out his hand to hers.

She let him take and hold it, and sat beside him, while he began muttering again. Gradually he began to realize where he was, and to remember.

"It is all true, then, Joan," he said. "He has had his revenge for his fancied wrongs. He has had the best years of my life, and he has beaten me in the end."

"Beaten you?" asked Joan. "You are not beaten. They are at their wits' ends what to do now, and tomorrow you will send them packing and begin your new life."

"A pitiful hope," he answered. "For he has given me back one thing—my faith in that poor woman upstairs, and, with it, a greater faith in humanity; but he has robbed me of all my hope."

"Why, John?"

"Because I could not have imagined that humanity was so vile. Joan, I am crushed by his revelation. If he entered this room now I feel that his will would dominate mine."

"Those are the words of a sick man," said Joan. "Tomorrow you will adjust yourself. Tomorrow you will be strong. Why, hardly a man on earth could do what you have done with the morphine."

"I suppose I shall carry on my fight," he answered wearily. "But victory will mean nothing to me."

"I shall stand by your side until I have seen you conquer, and until I have seen you happy in your success."

"And then, Joan?"

"Then? Then I shall go somewhere, I suppose."

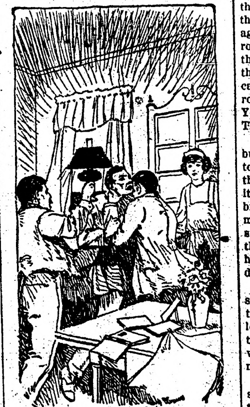
"Go away? From me? Is it because of Mrs. Dana?"

"Because of her, John."

"But she is nothing to me. She was never anything. Even my monomania of revenge rose out of wounded pride, not love. Surely you will not leave me because I once thought that I loved another?"

"It isn't that, John. But, you see, she has been an integral part of your life all these years. Even though her mind was gone, there was the consciousness of her presence that ate into your brain; she was the mainspring of your existence here. She would have been your wife today, but for that dastard's scheme. She is innocent, she has been deeply wronged, and her life has become bound up with yours indissolubly. You see, John, there is no getting away from that."

"Joan, don't you know she hates me? She thinks that my death will avenge her wrongs and cure her of her troubles. She has tried three times to kill me. In some mysterious manner she has learned the location of my room. Once she stabbed me in the wrist with a table-knife. Once she got the matron's revolver, but fortunately it was unloaded. I have been planning to send her somewhere where she could be better cared for and where my presence would not be a constant incitation to her."



Joan Saw the Secretary Snatch Up the Lamp and Hold It on High.

Joan shook her head. "It is all part of the past," she said. "One can't cancel the past. One must just carry it with one and try to profit by it. You know that, John."

"You do not love me, Joan."

She turned her face away; tears that filled her eyes came from the depths of her being. Lancaster took both her hands in his.

"You love me, Joan?"

"Too well to wrong you and myself," she answered. "Too well to let our love build a wall between us. So well that I would rather let the spiritual bond remain, rather than mar it."

He drew her toward him, and she remained with her cheek resting against his, with his arms about her. She could not stir. A strange physical lethargy seemed to hold her limbs, but her will was unshaken.

"Your last word, Joan?" whispered Lancaster.

"No, dear," she answered.

The humorous look that came at such odd moments into Lancaster's eyes flickered there now. "Your very last?" he asked.

"O, don't ask me to deny my resolution," she said.

She released herself and stood beside him. As she did so she had a sensation as if her feet rested on a cushion of air. Her physical weakness was matched by her sense of instability; she longed with all her heart to lean within the arms outstretched toward her; she knew that, if she had given Lancaster life, he could give her the strength of life; he was of her own people, and all that was chivalric and dear in the land she had loved seemed embodied in him. And before her she saw the closing hospital walls of some far distant city: she must exile herself from everything that she had known.

"You little stubborn thing, Joan!" said Lancaster tenderly. "But I shall go on loving you."

"I shall love you, John."

"I shall hear from you sometimes?"

"Yes. And I shall remain in Avonmouth until your battle is won. But there will be no battle. They know that they are beaten. You will never be weak again."

"No," said Lancaster. "But, O Joan, if you had said 'yes' to me it would have been so easy."

With the maternal feeling that is part of every woman's love for the man she loves, she stooped and kissed his forehead.

"You must try to sleep now," she said. "I shall leave the revolver with you, and you shall lock your door."

"I am not afraid of them," he answered. "They can do nothing, Joan. Keep it to assure you of your own safety."

That seemed the better way. There was nothing that the pair could do to Lancaster. If they aimed at anyone it would be she. She saw that, and she went out without speaking to Lancaster again. In the hall she breathed more freely. It was ended now, and she knew that she had done the right thing, the only possible thing. But Lancaster had not surmised the terrific woman's battle which she had fought during those last few minutes.

She stood in the hall for a few moments in uncertainty. She did not mean to sleep, but to lie awake with her door open, resting, and listening for any movements in the house. But, though her brain was awake, she was more tired than she had ever been in her life. She could hardly drag her limbs upstairs, and again she had that sense of walking on air. Under the little burning lamp she stopped again to gather strength to go to her room. The ticking of the clock in the hall below was the only sound in the house. She strained her ears to catch the sound of voices from Myers' room, but she could hear nothing. Yet the men could not be asleep. They must be planning together.

The silence in the ramshackle old building was a ghastly one. It seemed to hide innumerable thoughts, as if those of all who had ever lived within its walls survived, breaking upon her brain in invisible waves. She felt enmeshed in a web, as the dreamer who struggles to wake into free life from the horrors of nightmare. The wind had gone down, and the raindrops dripped rhythmically from the eaves.

Joan had an intense inclination to surrender, to run back into Lancaster's room, cry to him to help her, to let her fight beside him as long as they lived. And the silence, which was becoming more terrific every moment, was unmistakably malevolent.

She reached her room and tried to shake away her fears. She went to the window and leaned out. The night was clearing, and a delicious air blew in from the hills. Not a light was to be seen in Millville or Lancaster. And she wept again, heartbroken. It was all ended, that peace which had begun to inclose her, and all her hopes, and all that love within was bound up so intimately with the idea of home.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Genius of Philology Given Stern Justice

Curious pleas have sometimes been put forward in support of the reprieve of notorious criminals. One of the strangest was that on behalf of George Ruloff, an American school teacher, who was convicted in 1870 of a series of robberies and murders, his own wife and daughter being among the victims. For cold-blooded cruelty his record would be hard to beat, but Ruloff had his other side.

He was an ardent philologist, and had been engaged for years on the invention of a universal language. No one could attempt to palliate his crimes, but a widely signed petition was presented to the governor of Virginia for his reprieve on the ground that as his invention, if completed, would be of the utmost benefit to mankind it would be criminal folly to extinguish such a light of learning. The governor thought otherwise and Ruloff was duly hanged.

Copying Nature

Cover a billiard table in a bright red cloth instead of the customary soft green and every billiard hall would be deserted in half an hour. Billiard tables from the beginning were covered with green for the same reason that nature covers her open stretches usually with green, because it is soothing to the eye.

APPETIZING FOODS

During winter oranges and other citrus fruits are most reasonable in price and most abundant. Their delicious flavor stimulates and refreshes the appetite and their color adds to any dish or table.

For the first course an orange cup, filled with diced orange, a bit of grapefruit, seeded and peeled grapes and rind-flavored sugar sirup, is especially well liked.

Although the orange is delicately acid, it has an alkaline reaction which makes it especially valuable in counteracting foods that produce acids.

As a dessert, oranges make an excellent sweet course, containing sugar which is partially digested. After an elaborate and heavy dinner a light, easily digested dessert is a necessity.

Orange Mint Cup.—Take one cupful each of diced grapefruit pulp, orange pulp and pineapple. Mix and sprinkle with a little sugar and lemon juice—or better a lemon sirup, made by cooking sugar, lemon juice and rind with a little water. Chill and fill halves of oranges, set into sherbet cups, or simply fill the glasses with the fruit mixture. At the last moment sprinkle with finely minced mint and garnish with a sprig of fresh mint in the center of the glass.

Orange Meringues.—Separate into sections four oranges, without breaking the membrane. Make a sirup of one-half cupful each of lemon juice, water and any canned fruit juice, boiling five minutes. Add the oranges, cover and cool. This is compote and may be served just as it is. Place these sirup-covered orange sections on rounds of sponge cake, moisten with a little of the sirup. Prepare a meringue, using two egg whites, two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar and a tablespoonful of the compote sirup. Cover the oranges and set in a moderate oven to brown. Serve cold with some of the compote as a garnish.

Orange Ice Cream.—Cook two cupfuls of water with one cupful of sugar, cool and add one cupful of orange juice, a pint of thin cream, a pinch of salt. Freeze as usual.

Winter Fruits.

The orange is especially prized during the winter months, when it is at its best and most plentiful and good flavored.

The winter diet, being rich and heavy, needs such fruit to keep the body in good condition. All citrus fruits contain fruit salts and acids which are most beneficial to health.

A pint of orange juice contains almost the same number of food units as three-quarters of a pint of milk. Orange juice is quickly assimilated and because of its action on the bowels, is one of the finest digestive regulators.

Its beautiful color makes the orange particularly enjoyed in winter, when color in foods is most appreciated.

As a garnish the orange has wide possibilities. Baskets, cups, flowers, confections, may be prepared, the rind preserved and served as a confection, or as receptacles for salads or jellies.

A sherbet is easily prepared using citrus fruit, orange or lemon juice, sugar sirup and water, or if a richer sherbet is desired, thin cream or rich milk in place of the water. Serve in orange cups with roast meats or fowl. Candies of various kinds flavored with these fruit juices are both wholesome and delicious. Plain fondant, flavored with lemon or orange juice and made into patties like the wintergreen or peppermints are well liked.

Turkish delight prepared with gelatin, sugar sirup and fruit juices, cooled in a flat dish and cut into oblongs, then rolled in powdered sugar is another very popular confection.

Glaced fruits are particularly well liked during the cold weather. Orange sections, kumquats, tangerines and lemon quarters are very attractive. These should be eaten the same day made, as they soften in the air quickly.

To prepare the sirup for glaced fruits take two cupfuls of sugar, one cupful of boiling water, one-third of a teaspoonful of cream of tartar. Boil until the sirup begins to color light brown, or to 310 degrees F., then dip each piece quickly, keeping the sirup over hot water.

Wellesley Fudge.—Cook three squares of chocolate, one-half cupful of milk and two-thirds of a cupful of brown sugar for ten minutes; add one teaspoonful of vanilla. Cream one cupful of light brown sugar and one-half cupful of butter. Add one-half cupful of sour milk, two well-beaten eggs and two cupfuls of sifted pastry flour, one teaspoonful of soda and one-fourth of a teaspoonful of salt. To this add the above cooked mixture. Combine and bake in layers for twenty minutes. Put together with chocolate fudge frosting.

Teach your child Internal cleanliness

THE mother who permits constipation in her baby or older child is risking the health, even the life, of her little one.

Fretfulness, feverishness, night terrors, grinding the teeth in sleep, biliousness, coated tongue, loss of appetite, any of these may indicate constipation. Poisons from the child's stagnant intestine are flooding the little body, and if left unchecked may lead to serious consequences.

Avoid Laxatives—Say Doctors

A noted authority says that laxatives do not overcome constipation, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition.

Medical science has found in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and hastens its passage through and out of the body. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Let your infant or child have Nujol regularly, and see rosy cheeks, clear eyes and happiness return once more.

Nujol is used in children's and general hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world.

APPLY KNIFE TO APPROPRIATIONS

Board of Control Gives Legislature Lesson in Budget Making and Money Saving.

St. Paul—Cutting the appropriation requests of 18 state institutions to a figure half a million dollars below the amount actually appropriated for them two years ago, the state board of control has given the legislature a remarkable object lesson in budget making.

Nothing like it has been seen in state finances for many years. Not only are the requests for "specific purposes" cut to $2,065,250, comparde with $2,265,150 granted for buildings, improvements and equipment two years ago, but the current expense appropriations for the biennium are cut to $5,185,000, a decrease of $305,000 from the allowances made two years ago.

The total appropriation requests for the board and its 18 institutions for the next two years are $7,880,250, a decrease of $504,900 from the amounts actually allowed by the legislature in 1923.

FUNDS ASKED ARE HIGH

Hitchcock Reports Total Before Committee Exceeds Limit By $20,000,000.

St. Paul—Appropriation requests which will face the Minnesota Legislature at this session will aggregate about $60,000,000 — $5,000,000 more than the total requests two years ago and $20,000,000 more than the actual appropriations that the 1923 Legislature made.

Representative R. W. Hitchcock, chairman of the House of Representatives committee on appropriations, passed this information on to members of his committe at their first meeting. It was his purpose to give them some general idea of the task that confronts them at the start of their job to reduce the total state expendituers in accordance with the demands of Governor Christianson.

Mr. Hitchcock, sitting as chairman of the appropriations committee, holds the same position that Governor Christianson held for the last four sessions of the Legislature. Through this committee, and the corresponding committee on finance in the Senate, of Senator A. J. Rockne of Zumbrota is chairman, every bill which cost the taxpayers money must pass before being considered by the Legislature as a whole.

The total amount of appropriations sought by state departments is about $44,500,000 which is about $500,000 less than the budget total two years ago.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION

To Sound Public Opinion on Convention System.

Replacing county officials on a party-designated basis, the same as state officers, will be before the Minnesota Legislature at this session. A bill already has been introduced to require that candidates for the Legislature be designated as affiliated with a political party.

The Quinn bill which provides for a constitutional amendment, authorizing the enactment of laws encouraging reforestation of the lands in the state and carries a provisions for special taxation, was introduced. The amendment is similar to amendment No. 4, which failed to pass at the last election and carries identical provisions.

The appointment or employment of married women in public office, other than one elective would be declared unlawful in a bill introduced in the House. The bill carries the provision making it a misdemeanor for any public official to engage the services of any married women in an official capacity.

Support of a bill to be introduced in the legislature to provide for children unsuitable for adoption is being urged by Judge C. F. Hall, director of the state children's bureau. Judge Hall pointed out that Germany, China, Japan and Canada have patterned their laws after Minnesota. He declared, however, that dispite the fine record of the state there is a defect in the program in failing to provide care for certain defective children, including those effected with tuberculosis, unstable in conduct, diseased or handicapped in some other way. A bill, he said, would be introduced in the legislature to be known as the "bill to provide for children unsuitable for adoption."

Farmer-labor members will make a fight at the session to revise the drainage laws, which they contend are working an injustice, particularly to northern Minnesota farmers. Assessments, they hold, have become so burdensome that they are in reality confiscation. Two years ago a law, known as the Enstrom act, delayed payment of assessments. The proposal now is to bring permanent relief and modify operation of the law in the future. A superpower bill, sponsored by Representative S. A. Stockwell, of Minneapolis, is to have support of the minority members.

EXPECT BUDGET SLASH

Christianson Seeks to Keep Total Down to $40,000,000 for Biennium.

St. Paul—Recommendations calling for drastic cuts in the state budget are advocated by Governor Theodore Christianson.

In accordance with expressed economy principles, the budget should not go beyond the $40,000,000 mark, Governor Christianson said. Two years ago the budget for the biennium totalled $45,000,000. This year's estimate have been placed at $44,500,000.

It was intimated by the chairman of the house appropriation committee and by the chairman of the senate finance committee that the total demands upon the state for the biennium will reach $60,000,000. This includes the budget requests and appropriation bills that are under preparation.

The governor had nothing to add to his expressed attitude on the highway development program.

"I have nothing to add at persent to what I said about bond issues and gasoline and automobile questions in my message to the legislature," he said.

PLAN REBATE ON GAS TAXES

Measure Would Create New Fund From Which to Repay Cash.

St. Paul—A plan to circumvent any obstacles that might arise in granting rebates on a gasoline tax under the constitutional amendment adopted at the last election was presented to the Legislature in a bill introduced in the House by Representative J. R. Sweitzer of St. Paul and F. A. Green of Stephen. The companion bill will be introduced in the Senate by Senator Charles N. Orr of St. Paul.

The bill sets up what is designated as a "gasoline tax fund" into which the gasoline tax money first goes and from which the rebates are made. The proceeds then go into the constitutional amendment, for the use of the state highway department.

The elections committee decided to hold a meeting, February 5 at which time all persons interested in the proposals to re-establish the Legislature on a partisan basis, and to provide for political conventions which shall draft platforms and nominated candidates for state and Congressional offices, will have a chance to be heard.

MINNESOTA BRIEFS

Madelia—Enough stock was subscribed at a meeting of business men, and farmers of this community to assure a new creamery building. About $10,000 will be needed.

Kenyon—The congregation of the First Evangelical Lutheran church here has made plans for the erection of a new edifice to replace the one destroyed by fire last fall. The new building is to cost $40,000.

St. Cloud—In the summer of 1924 the bankers of Stearns county started a campaign for 10,000 acres of alfalfa in Stearns county in the spring of 1925.

Gaylord—Jay D. Utendorfer, prominent in banking circles in this vicinity, has been elected vicepresident of the Reliance State Bank of Chicago.

Lake City—Mr. and Mrs. E. Berktold of Lake City celebrated their fifty-seventh wedding anniversary and Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Gue observed their fifty-fifth wedding anniversary here.

Arlington—Mrs. Augusta Henrietta Thoele, 82 years old, a survivor of the Indian massacre in 1862, died at the home of her son, Theodore, in Arlington township.

Owatonna—Thomas Cashman of Owatonna was to leave for Washington where he will testify before the Coolidge agricultural commission concerning Minnesota's farming conditions. He is representing the Minnesota Farm Bureau agricultural legislative committee.

Fairmont—An organized band of farm robbers, who travel in trucks are sought by Martin county authorities following the looting of several farms in this vicinity.

Ostrander—The new $30,000 Community Hall was opened by a banquet and dance in which visitors from many of the surrounding towns took part.

Belle Plaine—A movement has been launched by the Community club to secure community co-operation in a plan to erect a city hospital. A committee has been appointed to promote the undertaking.

Canby—One of the most disastrous farm fires in this section in several years was that which destroyed the cattle barns on the farm of Frank Chizek, southwest of Canby. Fifty-four head of thoroughbred Hereford cattle, including a bull valued at $600, seven head of horses, 13 head of brood sows, 2,500 bushels of oats, a large quantity of hay and some farm machinery was destroyed with the building.

Elk River—Five small daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bedock were burned to death in farm home of their parents. The mother and father were seriously burned.

Fairmont—Dr. G. W. Dewey of this city has accepted appointment as assistant surgeon at the state soldiers home, Lafayette, Ind.

St. Paul—Richard J. Peterson, parole agent of the Red Wing Training School for Boys, who shot and seriously wounded an escaped inmate in St. Paul, was suspended pending an investigation of the case by the state board of control.

Resolutions

We, the members of the Pastoral Conference of the Northern Minnesota district of the Norwegian Lutheran Church of America in regular annual meeting assembled in Moorhead, Minn, Jan. 19-22, 1925, reaffirm, in harmony with the position of the Norwegian Lutheran of America, our complete adherence and loyalty to the scriptures of the Old and the New Testaments as the inspired and infallible Word of God, and as the only rule in matters of faith and life;

Be it further resolved that in accordance with this we take a firm, decided and united stand against the work and influence of the so-called Modernist Movement,

Be it further resolved that these resolutions be adopted and that the secretary be instructed to prepare a copy to be sent to each member of the conference for publication in local papers thruout the Northern Minnesota district.

FALLACY OF SO-CALLED GUARANTY OF BANK DEPOSITS BY LAW

An Attempt to Create Integrity by Legislative Act—Mere Words No Good Substitute for Individual Responsibility, Says Bankers' Chief.

By WALTER W. HEAD, President
The American Bankers Association

Walter W. Head

The bank deposit guaranty is an attempt to establish fictitious value—to create value by order of government. Adopted first in Oklahoma in 1909, this plan was carried into several western states and threatened, for a brief time, to become a serious issue in connection with our national banking system. Recent experience has proved, in this instance as in others, that sound economic law cannot be disregarded with impunity.

Oklahoma adopted the deposit guaranty as a result of the failure of a number of banks in the panic of 1907. The system was misnamed at the start. It was not a guaranty, in any true sense of the word, but simply a form of mutual insurance. The various state banks were assessed a limited amount, in proportion to their respective deposits, to pay the losses incurred by failures. For a time all went well. The prosperity incident to the development of territory, recently opened to settlement, prevented failures. But the deflation of 1920-1921 brought about a crisis in the guaranty system of Oklahoma. In November, 1921, the failure of the Bank of Commerce of Okmulgee brought the estimated total liabilities of the Oklahoma Guaranty Fund up to $3,354,000. Guaranty fund warrants drew 6 per cent interest, under the law which then existed, and this meant that the interest charge alone, on these outstanding warrants, amounted to two-thirds of the maximum possible annual assessment.

Failure and Repeal

Other banks failed in the following months, and the plight of the State guaranty fund became hopeless. State banks surrendered their state charters and entered the national system. By January, 1923, deposits in Oklahoma state banks were only $78,000,000, only half the total of November, 1921. This was the condition when the state legislature convened, and, after various attempts to relieve the situation by one of several expedients, the law makers repealed the guaranty sections of the banking law.

This is the story of the Oklahoma bank deposit guaranty, which was born, lived and died in the brief space of fourteen years. In that time the Oklahoma plan was adopted, with some modifications, by seven other states. In none of these has it been abandoned as yet. In every instance it has been subjected to severe strain, and in most of them the question of whether or not the guaranty fund can pay existing obligations is somewhat doubtful. My own state, Nebraska, I am thankful to say, is not one of these.

The guaranty of bank deposits failed in Oklahoma and is threatened with failure in other states because it was not what it pretended to be, and, furthermore, because it violated sound economic law. The so-called guaranty is not, in any state, what its name implies. It is not in fact a guaranty. It is an insurance plan dependent, as are all insurance plans, upon the sufficiency of the premiums which may be paid. Experience has proved that the premiums are not sufficient—and yet the insured cannot afford to submit to higher premiums. Conceived in economic sin, born in the midst of economic iniquity, the bank deposit guarantee in Oklahoma went the way of all similar attempts to overcome or defy the natural law of economics. And yet we have today in the Congress of the United States a Representative of the State of Oklahoma who will—if he has his way—foist this iniquitous, impracticable system upon the National Banking System.

Integrity Cannot Be Legislated

The fundamental difficulty with the insurance of bank deposits—to apply the correct name—is that it is an attempt to create integrity and financial ability by legislative act. Depositors in many instances were invited to accept, as their principal assurance of safety, a gilded sign upon the bank window, "This bank protected by the state guaranty fund." This protection, it has been proved, was not adequate; mere words were not a good substitute for individual responsibility, supported by stocks of gold or currency. No longer was there a premium upon the character of the banker; no longer did depositors feel the necessity of giving preference to men of character when they selected their banker. They felt that the guaranty fund took the place of that. But the guaranty of bank deposits in Oklahoma failed—as all efforts to substitute governmental dictum for integrity and ability must fail.

COW-SCALPERS

In Wisconsin the State Bankers Association is employing a man to give his entire time to the agricultural work of the association. His major activity is along the line of marketing dairy cattle. He is constantly in touch with the stock for sale in all parts of the State and is in position to refer a prospective buyer to stock of the breed and quality desired. He has the assistance of reliable field men who are good judges of dairy cattle. There is no need for any farmer to fall into the hands of unscrupulous "cow scalpers" if his bankers will only take an interest in helping him to make the right kind of connections.—Banker-Farmer.

We are now selling our butter through the Minnesota Co-Operative Creameries Assn., Inc. and our aim should be to MAKE a Land O' Lakes product.

To produce Land O' Lakes quality everything should be kept clean and all utensils must be scalded well. Cool the cream quickly in water, the year around, stirring while cooling. To deliver cream often is very important. If you live far from town you should club together with your neighbors. You dont realize what a difference there is in making butter from cream delivered 2 times a week, and cream delivered weekly-- even tho your week old cream is sweet. Let us get into the Land O' Lakes class and we shall be well paid for it.

Yesterday was the birthday anniversary of Lincoln, the Savior of his Country, and a week from Sunday will be the birthday anniversary of Washington, the Father of his Country. One came from the common people; the other from the aristocrats of his day;-- yet these two men, so very unlike in many ways, filled the most conspicuous parts in the history of the greatest republic in the world.

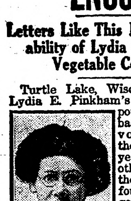
SICK WOMEN SHOULD BE ENCOURAGED

Letters Like This Prove the Reliability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound



Turtle Lake, Wisconsin.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for weakness, backache and nervousness. I had these troubles for years and had taken other medicines for them, but I have found no medicine so good as the Vegetable Compound and I recommend it to my friends who have troubles similar to mine. I saw it advertised and thought I would try it and it has helped me in all my troubles. I have had six children and I have taken the Lydia E. Pinkham Vegetable Compound before each one was born, for weakness, vomiting, poor appetite and backache, and again after childbirth because of dizzy headaches. It is a good medicine for it always helps me. I have also taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills for the last eight years for constipation." — Mrs. MABEL LA POINT, R. F. D. No. 1, Turtle Lake, Wisconsin.

In a recent canvass, 98 out of every 100 women say they were benefited by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Charming Thought

It was after dinner and the talk had turned to psychology. This disturbing question had just been put: "When does old age really begin?"

To establish a formula was proving rather difficult, when one lady, who did not look her years, found the following:

"To me, old age is always 15 years older than I am."

A man frequently has more unknown friends than he thinks he has.

"During 60 years of Married Life"...

Three Generations Kept Healthy and Happy

"Beecham's Pills were always considered indispensable by my parents during sixty years of married life and I am never without them in my home, as they are used when required by myself (aged sixty-one), and wife and children. This covers a period of over eighty years.

My wife and sons also believe there is no remedy for constipation and biliousness equal to Beecham's Pills.

So many so-called "cures" for biliousness and kindred troubles leave after effects that are certainly injurious, but Beecham's Pills give prompt relief and leave one in a healthy and happy condition." N. J. M. Ramsay, N. J.

92 DEPARTMENTS CUT TO 12; PLAN

Interim Committee Submits Report Urging Economy Coordination

St. Paul — With the plans for a new Minnesota system of government completed excepting for a few minor details, the state legislature was preparing to start work on one of the most important pieces of legislation that has arisen in the last 10 years.

The report of the House interim committee was made setting forth the method by which the state's 92 departments, boards and commissions may be moulded into a symmetrical grouping under the titles of 12 departments.

The report of the committee is being discussed by legislators with considerable interest.

The proposed new department of finance is the central feature of the system and the key to the economics that it is expected to bring about. It would be under three commissions, and have charge not only of making the state budget, but of controlling expenditures as they are made, making all purchases, and supervising employment.

Another important department proposed is that of commerce, which would group the superintendent of banks, the commissioner of insurance and the securities commission. Three department heads would sit together on all decisions.

The 12 departments which would be created in the reorganization of the state government proposed by interim commission are:

- Executive Council—
- Department of administration and finance.
- Department of agriculture.
- Department of highways
- Department of education.
- Department of health.
- Department of commerce.
- Department of labor and industry.
- Department of conservation.
- Department of welfare.
- Department of taxation.
- Department of railroads, warehouses and utilities.

ASK RURAL CREDIT INQUIRY

Senate Adopts Resolution Ordering Investigation of Bureau.

St. Paul — The way was cleared for investigation of the operation of the Minnesota Rural Credits bureau when the senate adopted, without date, Senator C. A. Lund's resolution authorizing the inquiry.

Senator Lund, who introduced the resolution, said that rumors had been circulated in criticism of the rural credits bureau, and that he desired the investigation as a friendly move to clear up the situation.

Senator J. D. Sullivan told the committee that he had heard complaints about the way loans had been made and he thought it well to have an investigation made, since the legislature now is being asked to authorize the issuance of $40,000,000 for rural credits bonds.

The seller of poisonous moonshine which is not poisonous enough to kill, but only bad enough to disable is the target of Representative E. L. MacLean of Minneapolis who introduced a bill in the House. The bill makes it a felony for anyone to sell liquor, which so affects the drinker that he is permanently disabled, disfigured, maimed or injured.

MINNESOTA BRIEFS

Barnum — Verified figures on chicken raising show that 12 farmers in the vicinity of Barnum and Mahtowa received checks for $100 or more for eggs in November.

Gaylord—Jay D. Utendorfer, prominent in banking circles in this vicinity, has been elected vicepresident of the Reliance State Bank of Chicago.

Nashwauk—The electorate of this village voted favorably for the construction of a Memorial building to be erected at once. The building will cost in the neighborhood of $100,000 and is in memory of the men who lost their lives during the World war.

Bemidji — Bemidji school pupils who have not been vaccinated have been given their choice of being vaccinated inside of three days from the date of exposure or being quarantined for a period of 21 days, according to Superintendent J. C. West.

Canby—One of the most disastrous farm fires in this section in several years was that which destroyed the cattle barns on the farm of Frank Chizek, southwest of Canby. Fifty-four head of thoroughbred Hereford cattle, including a bull valued at $600, seven head of horses, 13 head of brood sows, 2,500 bushels of oats, a large quantity of hay and some farm machinery was destroyed with the building.

Minneapolis — A cold wave, which followed in the wake of high winds and snowfall, brought new low temperatures for the winter to some sections of the Northwest.

Morris — With a registration of 325 students the West Central school of agriculture here has broken last year attendance records of 276.

Minneapolis — Proposed railroad freight advances that would have added millions of dollars to the annual freight bill of the upper Mississippi valley were suspended until May 31 by the interstate commerce commission.

URGES BUDGET SLASH

Governor Seeks $3,000,000 Reductions in Appropriations Made Two Years Ago.

St. Paul—State appropriations for the next two years can be held down to $39,000,000 or less—a reduction of more than $3,000,000 from the appropriations made by the 1923 legislature—Governor Christianson informed the legislature.

The budget which Governor Christianson turned over to the legislature with his message asks that $45,592,950 be appropriated to run the state government for the next two years. Two years ago the appropriation requests were $46,195,960, so that the new budget is lower by $602,010. The actual appropriations made by the 1923 legislature totaled $42,182,669. This makes the new budget $3,410,281 higher than the appropriations of two years ago.

Then Governor Christianson made the following recommendations:

Possible Reductions.

The secretary of state's requested increase of $300,520, mostly for motor vehicle registration, can be held to an amount that is proportionate to the increased number of cars registered.

Printing commission budget can be reduced $50,000 if the legislature prefers that bills for printing, advertising and binding be held over and paid for out of the 1927 appropriation instead of having the money available in advance.

No justification for drainage commission's increased appropriation of $139,000 for topographic survey at this time.

Increases totaling $1,188,811 for live stock sanitary board and advisory commission for tuberculosis sanatoria, both involving the fight on tuberculosis, can be cut radically.

Increase of $106,304 in state board of health budget should not be granted.

Industrial commission increased requests of $37,420 can be covered by an unexpended balance to the department's credit.

Oil inspection department increase of $127,660 should be denied.

Division of weights and measures increased request of $30,000 unnecessary.

Game and fish department increase of $1,413,402, which is four times the 1923 appropriations, should not be granted.

Increases in state university and state teachers' colleges budgets should be for maintenance only in proportion to growth in attendance.

State board of cotnrol budget, while reasonable, can be reduced by eliminating construction totaling $688,300, and cutting out the colony of epileptics building at Cambridge, $320,000.

Cannot recommend $300,000 for swine barn at state fair and $40,000 for other fair ground improvements.

Quasi-public associations and societies should receive no increased appropriations.

State forestry board increase of 100 per cent is too much, but moderate increase could be granted for forest fire protection.

State parks can be held to 1923 schedule, saving $100,000 in requested appropriations.

OFFER BILLS FOR U. S. PARK

State's Consent to Acquisition of 80,000 Acres for National Game Refuge Ask

St. Paul — A national park, which would contain 80,000 Minnesota acres and have a frontage of 65 miles in this state, was offered Minnesota legislators in a bill introduced in the senate.

Minnesota is called upon to consent to acquisition by the federal government of this land in the proposed legislation. The question of further relinquishment of state rights is to be involved but no appropriation by the state is to be requested.

Congress on June 7, 1924, enacted a law, setting up a fund of $1,500,000 with which to "acquire by purchase, gift or lease such areas of land or of land and water between Wabasha, Minn., and Rock Island, Ill., on either side of or upon islands in the Mississippi river which are subject to overflow but which are not used for agricultural purposes."

Difficulties surrounding the supervision of the public dance hall are materially increased after midnight, according to proponents of a bill providing for the closing of these institutions at midnight.

Nine questions were propounded to Clifford L. Hilton, attorney general, by the motor vehicles tax committees of the senate and house of representatives to find out just what is the scope of the gasoline tax amendment to the constitution adopted by the voters at the last election. Questions have been raised regarding the status of the amendment, and the committees are anxious to obtain the attorney general's opinion before considering gasoline tax bills.

Eveleth — It is announced here that the recently completed hospital here for the treatment of trachoma patients has been designated as the place to which all persons in Minnesota suffering from trachoma can be sent.

Bemidji — Physicians found it necessary to amputate all five toes of the right foot and two toes of the left foot of Stella Fish, 13 years old, who with her sister, Thea, 16 years old, were badly frozen when they lost their way on Mud lake, near Puposky, recently.

TO PROBE RUMOR OF COLLINS HOAX

Stories That Imprisonment Was Planned Causes Court Action.

Cave City, Ky.—Circumstances surrounding the trapping of Floyd Collins in Sand cave and the efforts of volunteer rescuers to release him, will be made the subjct of a military court of inquiry, Brig. Gen. H. H. Denhardt, in command of the national guardsmen here, announced Monday.

"I hope by this court of inquiry to lay at rest all suspicions, whisperings of the efforts to block rescue work and rumors that Collins' entrapment was not genuine," said General Denhardt.

The commander said his plan for the military investigation had been sanctioned by Governor Fields and Adjutant General Kehoe.

"It is my purpose to determine exactly why the efforts to rescue Collins through the natural passage failed," Denhardt continued. "Whether Collins went into Sand cave through the regular entrance and was caught coming out and whether he knew of any other way out are matters which will be delved into.

"I have received information that the eye of suspicion has been turned on Kentucky and its officials and the wonderful cave regions by persons unfamiliar with the cave section. I propose in the inquiry, to bring out every fact.

"It is hoped that the findings of the board will be so definite and thorough from the testimony we hear that the underground whisperings will be quieted. Every witness will be summoned to testify and will be heard in full."

Lieutenant Robert Burdon of the Louisville fire department, who has stated he has "positive knowledge efforts were made to block the rescue work" will be summoned. Burdon was one of the comparative few who actually talked to Collins. Three brothers of the imprisoned man, Homer, Marshall and Andrea Collins, will be summoned and William M. Miller of the Louisville Courier-Journal, is expected to give his testimony.

DYING DIANA SPURNS HELP

Sand Hill Nymph Dies in Shack by Shores of Michigan.

Chicago.—Mrs. Alice Wilson, called Diana of the Dunes after she went among the sandy wastes between Michigan City and Gary, Ind., nine years ago to live in a shack by Lake Michigan, died Sunday. She succumbed to an illness for which she had refused to have a doctor because she feared to leave her hills for a hospital.

Mrs. Wilson, a graduate of University of Chicago and a Phi Beta Kappa, was a mathematician and editorial secretay of the Astro-Physical Journal, a university publication.

Her first winter in the dunes, Mrs. Wilson, then Alice Gray, spent in a tent. The first spring she spent there, she became an object of general interest when deputy sheriffs scouted through the sand hills to find the nymph who was bathing without a bathing suit and in the light of the full moon. She married Paul Wilson, three years ago, the two continuing to live close to nature.

Mrs. Wilson asked her husband to cremate her body and scatter her ashes to the winds from the top of Mount Tom, the highest hill along the lake shore.

HERRIN PEACE IS RATIFIED

Galligan to Stay Out of County—Gun Permits May Be Revoked.

Marion, Ill.—A long heralded peace will settle over turbulent Williamson county if the final details of the county's latest and most elaborate plan to end factional strife can be worked out satisfactorily at a meeting of the board of supervisors here.

Following the ratification of the peace pact by the board Saturday, to the appointment of deputy sheriffs and to means of removing arms-carrying permits.

These details awaited consideration after what was believed to be the main issue of the conference at Springfield Thursday, terminated in an agreement whereby Sheriff George Galligan would leave the country and turn over the duties of his office to Randall Parks, a deputy. Galligan will retain his title and be paid his salary until his term of office expires, in June 1926, according to the agreement.

Ask Repeal of U. S. Aid.

Bismarck.—Congress is memorialized to repeal laws for federal aid for state highways in a concurrent resolution introduced in the house by Representative H. W. Morton, Nonpartisan, of Dunn county.

Perfectly Natural

"My stars!" ejaculated Mrs. Johnson upon her return from a call on a neighbor, "Mizzus Spradling told me she'd heerd that some feller shot and killed his brother-in-law at the Christmas eve dance tuther night over beyond Mount Pizgy."

"Aw, well, when a feller is a brother-in-law and then up and goes to a dance what in torment can he expect to get—p'tu!—shot?" returned Gap Johnson of Rumpus Ridge.—Kansas City Star.

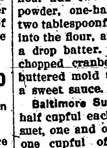
Cabbage With Cheese Sauce.

Cook a firm head of cabbage until tender, drain, place on a platter and pour over a rich white sauce to which has been added a cupful of grated cheese. Serve cut in pie-shaped pieces.

More Good Things.



Bananas are such good food and are used mainly as a fresh fruit, though there are countless ways of serving them attractively. As a dessert try:

Bananas With Sultana Sauce.—Soak one-half cupful of Sultana raisins in one cupful of canned fruit juice and one-half cupful of orange juice, or all of orange juice, over night. Drain the raisins and steam them over hot water for ten minutes. Mix two teaspoonfuls of cornstarch with one-fourth cupful of sugar, then add the raisins and the fruit juice. Cook over hot water for six minutes, add one tablespoonful of lemon juice and pour around bananas which have been baked in their skins and the skins removed.

Orange Shortcake. — For dessert, when it is hard to find something appetizing, prepare a rich biscuit dough and bake it in large-sized biscuits. Split them and butter well, making a small shortcake, using oranges that have been peeled, cut into small pieces, sprinkled with sugar and allowed to stand to season for an hour or two. Heap the fruit with plenty of juice on each layer and serve it hot.

Cranberry Pudding.—To one pint of flour add two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt, two tablespoonfuls of sweet fat, rubbed into the flour, and enough milk to bake a drop batter. Stir in one cupful of chopped cranberries and steam in a buttered mold two hours. Serve with a sweet sauce.

Baltimore Suet Pudding.—Take one-half cupful each of molasses, milk and suet, one and one-half cupfuls of flour, one cupful of chopped raisins, the juice and rind of a lemon, one teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, one-half teaspoonful of cloves, and one teaspoonful of salt. Mix and steam five hours. Serve with a fruit sauce.

Graham Pudding.—Take one-fourth of a cupful of butter, add one-half cupful of molasses, one-half teaspoonful of soda, one egg, one-half cupful of sour milk, one and one-half cupfuls of graham flour, one cupful of raisins, and spices to taste. Mix well and steam four hours. Serve with an.

Onion Stuffed With Peppers.—Parboil until nearly done, six even-sized large onions. Remove the centers, chop and mix with finely minced green pepper that has been parboiled. Bake, basting with butter and water until nearly done, then sprinkle a teaspoonful of buttered crumbs over the top and brown quickly under the gas flame. Serve with a thin cream sauce.

Honey Dressing.—Take one-half cupful of strained honey; beat slowly into three well-beaten egg yolks. Place in a double boiler and stir over the heat until the mixture begins to thicken. Remove from the heat and beat until cool. Add salt and cayenne, a tablespoonful of lemon juice, and just before serving fold in a cupful of whipped cream.

Onion Soup.—Have ready one cupful of cooked onion which has been put through a sieve. Into a saucepan with one tablespoonful of butter, add two of flour, mix well and cook until thick. Add three cupfuls of scalded milk, seasoning to taste; let boil up once and serve with a spoonful of whipped cream in each cup or bowl.

Permanent roads are a good investment —not an expense

Why America Must Have More Paved Highways

Almost every section of the United States is confronted by a traffic problem.

Month by month this problem is becoming more and more serious.

Hundreds of cars pass a given point every hour on many of our state and county roads. Downtown city streets are jammed with traffic.

Think, too, how narrow many of our roads are, and how comparatively few paved highways there are in proportion to the steadily increasing number of cars.

If the motor vehicle is to continue giving the economic service of which it is capable, we must have more Concrete highways and widen those near large centers of population.

Every citizen should discuss highway needs of his community with his local authorities.

Your highway officials will do their part if given your support.

Why postpone meeting this pressing need?

An early start means early relief.

—18—

She lit her lamp, but her fingers slipped over the glass, and it fell to the floor with a crash that startled all the echoes in the old building. The smoky wick flared up. Joan turned it down with difficulty until the blaze was extinguished, and staggered to the bed, amazed at her weakness.

She could not keep her eyelids open, and she let them close wearily. But sleep was far from her, and still she listened. And after while an unmistakable sound reached her. Somewhere within the institute she heard a key turn in a lock.

It was the slightest distant sound, but it cut the darkness like a knife. And to her mind, the sound, which might mean nothing, might be, indeed, the key of Lancaster's door, seemed like the snap of a trap.

She slept and could not waken. Or, rather, she did not sleep, could not have slept; yet sleep had paralyzed her limbs and left her brain untouched; and her mind seemed preternaturally acute, so that she felt and saw everything that was happening in the building.

Someone was coming along the passage, as on that night before. The hand was upon the door. Through her closed and paralyzed eyelids Joan yet seemed to see the figure of a madwoman. Something was in her hand. It was the revolver which Joan had left upon the little table beside her.

Mrs. Dana stood over her, the weapon aimed at her, while her eyes sought her face.

Was she dreaming? Joan had waited through agony of centuries, and the woman was gone. Once more there was silence everywhere. And still she lay there, helpless, feeling all and knowing all, and that it had been no dream, but the prelude of worse to come.

It was strange, but she did not once picture Lancaster as in danger. It was as if the unchained spirit of evil, impotent to harm him, sought another victim. She waited, it seemed for aeons. And the the blow fell.

She heard a man's scream of fear, dinned through her ears distantly, with the accompanying pistol shot. Yet she was unable to stir, and it passed into her memory, as of something infinitely long ago. Presently there came the hum of voices, chattering cries, bare feet that ran wildly along the corridor without, hands at her door.

It was Mrs. Fraser's voice. Now, with a mighty effort, Joan shook herself free from the spell. She staggered from the bed and groped her way across the room.

Nobody was at the door now, but when she unlocked it a whirl of smoke burst in. Smoke filled the passage. Upon the floor beneath a woman was screaming. There were voices outside, and the sound of men running along the passages, but Joan could not locate them.

She staggered through the smoke, feeling for the stairs. It blinded her. She fell into a wall, felt a rigid body before her, and perceived dimly Mrs. Dana's face, wearing a look of exaltation.

She had come too far; she had reached the door of Mrs. Dana's room. Through a break in the smoke cloud Joan saw that the door was closed. Behind it someone was hammering. Then Myers' screams broke through the din and confusion. He was battering against the door, and the strong door, built to resist such pressure, refused to yield. His cries were terrifying. Under the door came little creeping tongues of flame.

Joan caught at Mrs. Dana. "Come with me!" she mumbled. "Come!"

The woman stood rigid as a statue. She felt like marble to the touch, but there was the same exaltation upon her face.

"Open the door!" whispered Joan with her last strength, and pointed. "Open it! Somebody is locked inside."

Myers was yelling as Joan had once heard a horse yell, trapped in a burning stable. The wood of the door was smoldering. Joan tried to reach the key. But the rigid body barred her way.

Then she heard her name called through the smoke. At the cry Mrs. Dana snatched the key from the lock and began to run along the corridor. Joan saw her dimly through the enwrapping smoke. She staggered, and fell into Lancaster's arms.

That was her last effort. Incapable of speech, she felt him bear her along the passage, where the smoke clouds were now shot through with streaks of flame. They thickened about her. Lancaster was carrying her down the stairs now, while hungry flames sprang at them from the walls and floor. He was staggering drunkenly when they reached the hall below.

He placed her on the grass, and plunged back into the flames. The institute was ablaze, fire streamed from the roof and windows. A group of villagers, clustered upon the lawn, looked on helplessly. Joan saw Jenkins, leading the matron, approaching her. She tried to tell him that Lancaster had gone back; she could not speak, but he understood her.

"The doctor's safe," he said, and as he spoke Joan saw Lancaster among a group of men who had gathered about something wrapped in a blanket.

He rose and came to her. That was all Joan remembered.

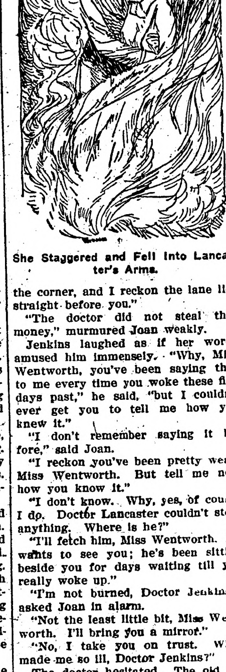
* * * * * * *

And for days and nights her memories of the past were cut short with Lancaster's return that night, borne back by the power of her love flung across the miles between them. She knew that he lived, and as the nightmare of the end filtered into her mind there came with it the sense of an abiding peace, as if the past was dead, with all its terrors.

Sometimes she felt that Lancaster was beside her; but when at last complete consciousness returned Joan found herself in bed in a strange house. Through the windows she could see the outlines of the familiar mountains, gilded in the red sunset glow against the blue of the sky. Beside her sat a figure which seemed to be so remotely of the past that it was difficult to refrain from laughing at the incongruity of the sight.

It was Jenkins, with his black head. As Joan stirred he turned toward her.

"That's right, Miss Wentworth," he said heartily. "Now you've rounded the corner, and I reckon the lane lies straight before you."



She Staggered and Fell Into Lancaster's Arms.

"The doctor did not steal that money," murmured Joan weakly.

Jenkins laughed as if her words amused him immensely. "Why, Miss Wentworth, you've been saying that to me every time you woke these five days past," he said, "but I couldn't ever get you to tell me how you knew it."

"I don't remember saying it before," said Joan.

"I reckon you've been pretty weak, Miss Wentworth. But tell me now how you know it."

"I don't know. Why, yes, of course I do. Doctor Lancaster couldn't steal anything. Where is he?"

"I'll fetch him, Miss Wentworth. He wants to see you; he's been sitting beside you for days waiting till you really woke up."

"I'm not burned, Doctor Jenkins?" asked Joan in alarm.

"Not the least little bit, Miss Wentworth. I'll bring you a mirror."

"No, I take you on trust. What made me so ill, Doctor Jenkins?"

The doctor hesitated. The old obstinate look began to close down on his features. But Joan caught him by the arm ingratiatingly.

"Come, now, tell me," she said. "Did he—did he inject morphine into me?"

"No, Miss Wentworth," said Jenkins, unable to hold out. "It wasn't morphine. It was curare—the stuff that paralyzes the motor nerves without destroying consciousness." His face grew somber. "It doesn't leave traces, as morphine does, and that devil had put it into morphine bottles and made the doctor think he was a morphine fiend. They hoped to kill him more quickly, but somehow he got used to it, and I guess they were at their wits' ends when you came along. But I'll call the doctor, Miss Wentworth."

When he was gone Joan lay back on her pillows, looking out into the mountains. She knew what had occurred that night; in her drugged state she had seen the whole dreadful picture: Myers unlocking Mrs. Dana's door and leading her to her own room, where she had obtained the revolver; her journey to Lancaster's room, bent on her dreadful mission; the murder of Lawson, in the room opposite, instead, for reasons which would never be known, but were certainly providential.

She saw further, by the same intuition which told her that it had been Mrs. Dana's body wrapped in the blanket upon the lawn. Myers, knowing her to be drugged, and believing Lancaster dead, had waited in Mrs. Dana's room and given her the matches, on her return, with which to start the fire, hoping thus to make sure of his victims and cover up his tracks. And he had fallen into the trap he had baited. Strong as he was, there must have been a stronger Power fighting him with Mrs. Dana's arms that night, when she turned the key in the lock and left him to die as he had willed Joan should die.

But Joan knew that no word of this would ever pass between Lancaster and her. And indeed, as she lay back and looked across the fields toward the mountains, she felt that something had turned that page, so that it had become not only of the dead past, but unreal in a way, and only the present peace existed.

She heard a quick step without. Lancaster stood in the doorway, came toward her, kneeled at her side and took her hands in his. And with that even the memories of the past became tenuous, half forgotten.

"Dear, it has come true," he said tenderly.

She lay happily in his arms, looking out all the time toward the sunset on the hills. There was so little to say, because their lives were only beginning.

"I don't want to go back to Avonmouth," she said at length.

"Nor I, Joan. This is our country."

"It must always be our country. But—but the fight, John?"

"I have stolen a march on you, my dear," he answered gayly. "I have fought out my fight while you were ill. I have resigned from the hospital; nobody guesses anything there; and I have convinced the trustees here, by my appearance, and by the presentation of certain papers happily discovered after the fire, that I am a responsible, moral person, honest enough to head the new institute which we are going to build—guess where!"

She looked at him. Then—

"That village in the mountains," she cried happily. "Where our lives really began. I could not wish for anything better."

"And the patient is going to be our porter. And Doctor Jenkins will be house surgeon, resident, with his wife—Joan, he didn't tell you about Mrs. Fraser? Jenkins! Jenkins!" His voice rang through the little house. "Come in at once and face the fire like a man, instead of slinking away into your consulting-room, you ruffianly young benedict!"

[THE END]

Telephone to Teach Better Enunciation

Men who are trying to improve telephone service believe that the telephone will teach its users to speak clearly—not with one conversation, but in the course of time. And, certainly, business would be expedited with perfect enunciation over the telephone. Even a simple name like Dix, say, when passed over the wires may become almost anything—and then it is spelled for verification, thus: "D for Dan, I for Ike, X for X-ray"—words as difficult as the one to be understood.

Progress in plain talking does seem to lag, in the opinion of The Nation's Business. Any optimism in that direction is blighted by the hash in our daily speech. Ideas seem to have transmission as much by telepathy as by telephony. "Wassatyugottado t'nighthuh?" But a jumble of letters will make sound and so may give a message to sophisticated ears. The eye is more expert than the ear at registering words. Whoever was fooled by the blanks in the penny dreadfuls of the long ago? The d——s were promptly accepted at their full brimstone content, but a curse by telephone might easily be garbled into a compliment. It's a wise ear that knows its own tongue.

It Happened in Boston

There had been a visitor, and to the lad she said: "And so this is little Walter? My, my! What a big boy you've grown to be! I wouldn't have believed it possible."

"Mother," said Walter when the visitor had gone, "doesn't it pass your comprehension how persons in whom one would naturally expect an ordinary degree of intelligence appear to believe, all history and nature to the contrary notwithstanding, that the children of their acquaintance will always remain infants, and persist in expressing surprise when they observe the perfectly natural increase in one's stature?"—Washington Star.

Laxatives do not overcome constipation

LAXATIVES and cathartics provide temporary relief only. Their continued use leads to permanent injury. In time, says an eminent physician, an almost incalculable amount of harm is done by the use of pills, salts, mineral waters, castor oil and the like.

Physicians advise lubrication for Internal Cleanliness

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Resolutions

We, the members of the Pastoral Conference of the Northern Minnesota district of the Norwegian Lutheran Church of America in regular annual meeting assembled in Moorhead, Minn., Jan. 19-22, 1925, reaffirm, in harmony with the position of the Norwegian Lutheran of America, our complete adherence and loyalty to the scriptures of the Old and the New Testaments as the inspired and infallible Word of God, and as the only rule in matters of faith and life;

Be it further resolved that in accordance with this we take a firm, decided and united stand against the work and influence of the so-called Modernist Movement,

Be it further resolved that these resolutions be adopted and that the secretary be instructed to prepare a copy to be sent to each member of the conference for publication in local papers thruout the Northern Minnesota district.

There are 74.1 miles of state trunk highway in this county on which $20,000 was spent last year for maintenance and almost $12,000 for improvements. Marshall County has paid out about $172,000 in auto taxes, since the new road law has been in force, and there has been $496,000 spent on the trunk highways in the county in the same length of time. It's not such a bad deal for the county after all.

The rural free delivery mail service was first established, as an experiment, over three routes in West Virginia on October 1st, 1896. The salary of a rural carrier at that time was $200.00 per year.

In less than a year after the first experiment the service had been extended to almost a hundred routes operating in 29 states. On June 30th, 1924 there were 44,260 routes. Over 27 000 small postoffices had been discontinued, which saved the Postoffice Department over a million and a half dollars per year. About the same amount was saved by cutting out Star Routes.

USERS of De Laval Cream Separators have carried away every first prize awarded at conventions of the National Creamery Buttermakers' Association since their first meeting in 1892. The record is unbroken!

The reason is that De Laval bowl design, together with low speed, enables the delivery of butter-fat globules unbroken and in their natural condition—thus insuring better butter.

Because of its close skimming the De Laval produces more cream, which means more butter.

Thus the user of a De Laval Separator gets both more and better butter.

THE COMMON ENEMY

H. H. S. Is Defeated By Thief River

An army of twelve basketball players came up from Thief River Falls Wednesday evening and defeated the Holt high-school basketball team in a hard-fought game by a score of 23 and 14. The battle raged under the visitors' basket most of the game and Holt played on the defensive. But for the excellent guarding of Ellestad and Larson the visitors may have tallied more baskets. Record for Holt: 5 field baskets and 4 free throws. Coach Toone of Thief River referred the game.

No Kissing in South Seas.

Another "close-up" finale is being attacked. The South Sea islands are often the scene of romantic stories and scenarios, but a traveler from there has remarked on the fact that there are no customs there which include kissing among the savages.

We are now selling our butter through the Minnesota Co-Operative Creameries Assn., Inc. and our aim should be to MAKE a Land O' Lakes product.

To produce Land O' Lakes quality everything should be kept clean and all utensils must be scalded well. Cool the cream quickly in water, the year around, stirring while cooling. To deliver cream often is very important. If you live far from town you should club together with your neighbors. You dont realize what a difference there is in making butter from cream delivered 2 times a week, and cream delivered weekly-- even tho your week old cream is sweet. Let us get into the Land O' Lakes class and we shall be well paid for it.

Is your DeLaval separator in good running order?

IF it isn't, then you may be losing butter-fat and shortening the life of the machine; and ninety-nine times out of a hundred it isn't the fault of the machine but due to the fact that it needs attention, adjustment, cleaning, or the replacement of some part.

Bring in your De Laval Separator to us and we will put it in first-class running order. Bring in the complete machine, and in order to save expense clean out the oil chamber and gears with kerosene or boiling water. You can do this just as well as we can.

A DeLaval Separator should last a lifetime, with proper care. We will help you care for it -

THE De Laval Separator Co. has records of thousands of their separators which have given satisfactory service for 20, 25 and even 30 years, and more. Every De Laval is made to give a lifetime of service, and with just ordinary care should do so.

Bring in your De Laval to us. We will go over it thoroughly and put it in first-class running order. We are specially prepared to give such service and have a separator expert to do it. Your De Laval may be running all right, but an occasional overhauling will make it run better, easier and longer.

SO BIG

By EDNA FERBER

(©, Doubleday, Page & Co.) WNU Service.

SELINA PEAKE

Well, here's a story by Edna Ferber. That settles the quality question. Probably there is no more popular writer of fiction in the whole country. As to short stories she's the woman "O. Henry." And as to novels—why, she has ten or a dozen to her credit and they are very much to her credit. Anyone who has not read "Buttered Side Down," "Roast Beef Medium" and "Fanny Herself" has missed a lot of good reading. All her stories and novels are worth while—clever in plot, well-written, clean, wholesome, glimpses of real life. Edna Ferber is called a "good scout" by both men and women, whether among the peaks of the Colorado Rockies or in the canyons of New York and Chicago. "So Big" is perhaps the best of all her novels. Anyway, it was one of the biggest successes of 1924—possibly the biggest. And that success was deserved; it's a real story of real people, you would say.

"'How big is my baby?' Selina would demand senselessly, 'How big is my man?'

"Then little Dirk DeJong, standing before his mother, would stretch his arms wide and squeal, 'So-o-o-o big!' in dutiful solo."

When he grew to be one of the most correct young men of Chicago's fashionable North Shore, he returned to his apartment one night, from visiting his mother, and questioned himself: "How big?" His answer is the story.

Chapter I

—1—

Until he was almost ten the name stuck to him. He had literally to fight his way free of it. From So Big (of fond and infantile derivation) it had been condensed into Sobig. And Sobig DeJong, in all its consonantal disharmony, he had remained until he was a ten-year-old schoolboy in that incredibly Dutch district southwest of Chicago known first as New Holland and later as High Prairie. At ten, by dint of fists, teeth, copper-toed boots, and temper, Dirk DeJong.

The nickname had sprung up from the early and idiotic question invariably put to babies and answered by them, with infinite patience, through the years of their infancy.

Selina DeJong, darting expertly about her kitchen, from washtub to baking board, from stove to table, or, if at work in the fields of the truck farm, straightening the numbed back for a moment's respite from the close-set rows of carrots, turnips, spinach, or beets over which she was laboring, would wipe the sweat beads from nose and forehead with a quick duck of her head in the crock of her bent arm. Those great fine dark eyes of hers would regard the child perched impermanently on a little heap of empty potato sacks, one of which comprised his costume. Selina DeJong had little time for the expression of affection. The work was always hot at her heels. You saw a young woman in a blue calico dress, faded and earth-grimed. Between her eyes was a driven look as of one who walks always a little ahead of herself in her haste. Her dark abundant hair was skewered into a utilitarian knob from which soft loops and strands were constantly escaping, to be pushed back by that same harried ducking gesture of head and bent arm. Her hands, for such use, were usually too crusted and inground with the soil into which she was delving. You saw a child of perhaps two years, dirt-streaked, sunburned, and generally otherwise defaced by those bumps, bites, scratches, and contusions that are the common lot of the farm child of a mother harried by work. Yet, in that moment, as the woman looked at the child there in the warm moist spring of the Illinois prairie land, or in the cluttered kitchen of the farmhouse, there quivered and vibrated between them and all about them an aura, a glow, that imparted to them and their surroundings a mystery, a beauty, a radiance.

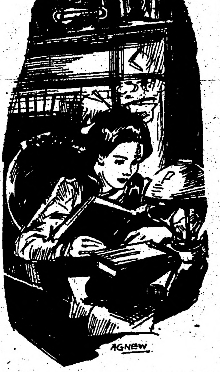
"How big is baby?" Selina would demand, senselessly. "How big is my man?"

The child would momentarily cease to poke plump fingers into the rich black loam. He would smile a gummy though slightly weary smile and stretch wide his arms. She, too, would open her tired arms wide, wide. Then they would say in a duet, his mouth a puckered pink petal, hers quivering with tenderness and a certain amusement, "So-o-o-o big!" with the voice soaring on the prolonged vowel and dropping suddenly with the second word. Part of the game. She would run to him, and swoop down upon him, and bury her flushed face in the warm moist creases of his neck, and make as though to devour him. "So big!"

But of course he wasn't. He wasn't as big as that. In fact, he never became as big as the wide-stretched arms of her love and imagination would have had him. You would have thought she should have been satisfied when, in later years, he was the Dirk DeJong whose name you saw (engraved) at the top of heavy cream linen paper, so rich and thick and stiff as to have the effect of being starched and ironed by some costly American business process; whose clothes were made by Peter Peel, the English tailor; whose roadster ran on a French chassis; whose wants were served by a Japanese houseman; whose life, in short, was that of a successful citizen of the republic. But she wasn't. Not only was she dissatisfied: she was at once remorseful and indignant, as though she, Selina DeJong, the vegetable pedler, had been partly to blame for this success of his, and partly cheated by it.

When Selina DeJong had been Selina Peake she had lived in Chicago with her father. They had lived in many other cities as well. In Denver during the rampant '80s. In New York when Selina was twelve. In Milwaukee briefly. There was even a San Francisco interlude which was always a little sketchy in Selina's mind and which had ended in a departure so hurried as to bewilder even Selina who had learned to accept sudden comings and abrupt goings without question. "Business," her father always said. "Little deal." She never knew until the day of his death how literally the word deal was applicable to his business transactions. Simeon Peake, traveling the country with his little daughter, was a gambler by profession, temperament, and natural talents. When in luck they lived royally, stopping at the best hotels, eating strange, succulent seaviands, going to the play, driving in hired rigs (always with two horses. If Simeon Peake had not enough money for a two-horse equipage he walked). When fortune hid her face they lived in boarding houses, ate boarding-house meals, wore the clothes bought when fortune's breath was balmy. During all this time Selina attended schools, good, bad, private, public, with surprising regularity considering her nomadic existence. She had a beautiful time. Except for three years, to recall which was to her like entering a sombre icy room on leaving a warm and glowing one, her life was free, interesting, varied. She made decisions usually devolving upon the adult mind. She selected clothes. She ruled her father. She read absorbedly books found in boarding-house parlors, in hotels, in such public libraries as the times afforded. She was alone for hours a day, daily. Frequently her father, fearful of loneliness for her, brought her an armful of books and she had an orgy, dipping and swooping about among them in a sort of gourmand's ecstasy of indecision. In this way, at fifteen, she knew the writings of Byron, Jane Austen, Dickens, Charlotte Bronte, Felicia Hemans.

Her three dark years—from nine to twelve—were spent with her two maiden aunts, the Misses Sarah and Abbie Peake, in the dim, prim Vermont Peake house from which her father, the black sheep, had run away when a boy. After her mother's death Simeon Peake had sent his little daughter back east in a fit of remorse and temporary helplessness on his part and a spurt of forgiveness and churchly charity on the part of his two sisters. The two women were incredibly drawn in the pattern of the New England spinster of fiction. Mitts, preserves, Bible, chilly best room, solemn and kittenless cat, order, little-girls-mustn't. They smelled of apples—of withered apples that have rotted at the core.



She Read Absorbedly Books Found in Boarding House Parlors.

Something of this she must have conveyed, in her desperation, to her father in an uncensored letter. Without warning he had come for her, and at sight of him she had been guilty of the only fit of hysteria that marked her life, before or after the episode.

So, then, from twelve to nineteen she was happy. They had come to Chicago in 1885, when she was sixteen. There they remained. Selina attended Miss Fister's Select School for Young Ladies. When her father brought her there he had raised quite a flutter in the Fister breast—so soft-spoken was he, so gentle, so sad-appearing, so winning as to smile. In the investment business, he explained. Stocks and that kind of thing. A widower. Miss Fister said, yes, she understood.

Simeon Peake had had nothing of the look of the professional gambler of the day. The wide slouch hat, the flowing moustache, the glittering eye, the too-bright boots, the gay cravat, all were missing in Simeon Peake's make-up. True, he did sport a singularly clear white diamond pin in his shirt front; and his hat he wore just a little on one side. But then, these both were in the male mode and quite commonly seen. For the rest he seemed a mild and suave man, slim, a trifle diffident, speaking seldom and then with a New England drawl by which he had come honestly enough, Vermont Peake that he was.

Chicago was his meat. It was booming, prosperous. He played in good luck and bad, but he managed somehow to see to it that there was always the money to pay for the Fister schooling. Selina was happy. She knew only such young people—girls—as she met at Miss Fister's school.

Her chum was Julie Hempel, daughter of August Hempel, the Clark street butcher. You probably now own some Hempel stock, if you're lucky; and eat Hempel bacon and Hempel hams cured in the hickory, for in Chicago the distance from butcher of 1885 to packer of 1890 was only a five-year leap.

Being so much alone developed in her a gift for the make-believe. In a comfortable, well-dressed way she was a sort of mixture of Dick Swiveller's Marchioness and Sarah Crewe. Even in her childhood she extracted from life the double enjoyment that comes usually only to the creative mind. "Now I'm doing this. Now I'm doing that," she told herself while she was doing it. Looking on while she participated. Perhaps her theater-going had something to do with this. At an age when most little girls were not only unheard but practically unseen, she occupied a grown-up seat at the play, her rapt face, with its dark serious eyes, glowing in a sort of luminous pallor as she sat proudly next her father.

In this way Selina, half-hidden in the depths of an orchestra seat, wriggled in ecstatic anticipation when the curtain ascended on the grotesque rows of Haverly's minstrels. She witnessed that startling innovation, a Jewish play, called "Sam'l of Posen." She saw Fannie Davenport in "Pique." Simeon even took her to a performance of that shocking and delightful form of new entertainment, the Extravaganza.

"The thing I like about plays and books is that anything can happen. Anything! You never know," Selina said.

"No different from life," Simeon Peake assured her. "You've no idea the things that happen to you if you just relax and take them as they come."

Curiously enough, Simeon Peake said this, not through ignorance, but deliberately and with reason. In his way and day he was a very modern father. "I want you to see all kinds," he would say to her. "I want you to realize that this whole thing is just a grand adventure. A fine show. The trick is to play in it and look at it at the same time."

"What whole thing?"

"Living. All mixed up. The more kinds of people you see, and the more things you do, and the more things that happen to you, the richer you are. Even if they're not pleasant things. That's living. Remember, no matter what happens, good or bad, it's just so much"—he used the gambler's term, unconsciously—"just so much velvet."

But Selina, somehow understood. "You mean that anything's better than being Aunt Sarah and Aunt Abbie."

"Well—yes. There are only two kinds of people in the world that really count. One kind's wheat and the other kind's emeralds."

"Fanny Davenport's an emerald," said Selina, quickly, and rather surprised to find herself saying it.

"Yes. That's it."

"And—and Julie Hempel's father—he's wheat."

"By golly, Sele!" shouted Simeon Peake. "You're a shrewd little tyke!"

Julie Hempel and Selina Peake, both finished products of Miss Fister's school, were of an age—nineteen. Selina, on this September day, had been spending the afternoon with Julie, and now, adjusting her hat preparatory to leaving, she clapped her hands over her ears to shut out the sounds of Julie's importunings that she stay to supper. Certainly the prospect of the usual Monday evening meal in Mrs. Tebbitt's boarding house did not present sufficient excuse for Selina's refusal. Indeed, the Hempel supper as sketched dish for dish by the urgent Julie brought little greedy groans from Selina.

"It's prairie chickens—three of them—that a farmer west of town brought Father. Mother fixes them with stuffing, and there's currant jell. Creamed onions and baked tomatoes. And for dessert, apple roll."

Selina snapped the elastic holding her high-crowned hat under her chignon of hair in the back. She uttered a final and quavering groan. "On Monday nights we have cold mutton and cabbage at Mrs. Tebbitt's. This is Monday."

"Well then, silly, why not stay!"

"Father comes home at six. If I'm not there he's disappointed."

Julie, plump, blonde, placid, forsook her soft white banishments and tried steel against the steel of Selina's decision.

"He leaves you right after supper. And you're alone every night until twelve and after."

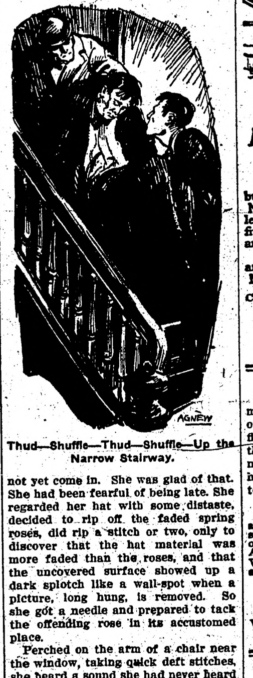
"I don't see what that has to do with it," Selina said stiffly. "If I'm not there he's disappointed. And that terrible Mrs. Tebbitt makes eyes at him. He hates it there."

"Then I don't see why you stay. I never could see. You've been there four months now, and I think it's horrid and stuffy, and oilcloth on the stairs."

"Father has had some temporary business setbacks."

Julie, fond though defeated, kissed her friend good-by.

Selina walked quickly the short distance from the Hempel house to Tebbitt's, on Dearborn avenue. Up in her second-floor room she took off her hat and called to her father, but he had not yet come in. She was glad of that. She had been fearful of being late. She regarded her hat with some distaste, decided to rip off the faded spring roses, did rip a stitch or two, only to discover that the hat material was more faded than the roses, and that the uncovered surface showed up a dark splotch like a wall-spot when a picture, long hung, is removed. So she got a needle and prepared to tack the offending rose in its accustomed place.



Thud—Shuffle—Thud—Shuffle—Up the Narrow Stairway.

Perched on the arm of a chair near the window, taking quick deft stitches, she heard a sound she had never heard before, and yet, hearing it, recognized it by one of those pangs, centuries old, called woman's instinct. Thud—shuffle—thud shuffle—up the narrow stairway, along the passage. She stood up, the needle poised in her hand. The hat fell to the floor. Her eyes were wide, fixed. Her lips slightly parted. The listening look. She knew.

She knew even before she heard the hoarse man's voice saying, "Lift 'er up there a little on the corner, now. Easy—e-e-easy." And Mrs. Tebbitt's high shrill clamor: "You can't bring it in there! You hadn't ought to bring it in here like this!"

Selina's suspended breath came back. She was panting now. She had flung open the door. A flat still burden partially covered with an overcoat carelessly flung over the face. The feet, in their square-toed boots, wobbled listlessly. Selina noticed how shiny the boots were. He was always very finicking about such things.

Simeon Peake had been shot in Jeff Hankins' place at five in the afternoon. The irony of it was that the bullet had not been intended for him at all. Its derelict course had been due to feminine aim. Sped by one of those over-dramatic ladies who, armed with horsewhip or pistol in tardy defense of their honor, spangled Chicago's dull '80s with their doings, it had been meant for a well-known newspaper publisher usually mentioned (in papers other than his own) as a bon vivant. The lady's leaden remonstrance was to have been proof of the fact that he had been more vivacious than [illegible].

Well, that's the end of her little world for Selina. What next for the orphan girl?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Boschee's Syrup

Allays irritation, soothes and heals throat and lung inflammation. The constant irritation of a cough keeps the delicate mucus membrane of the throat and lungs in a congested condition, which BOSCHEE'S SYRUP gently and quickly heals. For this reason it has been a favorite household remedy for colds, coughs, bronchitis and especially for lung troubles in millions of homes all over the world for the last fifty-eight years, enabling the patient to obtain a good night's rest, free from coughing with easy expectoration in the morning. You can buy BOSCHEE'S SYRUP wherever medicines are sold.—Adv.

A HOME WITHOUT CHILDREN

Lacks the Greatest Joys of Life

Many Wives are Childless Because of Ill Health. Read How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Mrs. Benedict

MRS. MARY R. BENEDICT
813 PAYSON STREET, KEWANEE, ILLINOIS

Kewanee, Illinois.—"When I was married about a year and a half I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because of ill health. I did not have any children. I now have two healthy little girls and I am sure I would not have had them had it not been for your medicine. Last spring and summer I got all run down, irregular, and I had awful headaches, and my back and side hurt me so that I could stay up only a short time. My limbs would get so tired and ache till I could cry. I started to take the Vegetable Compound again and used the Sanative Wash, and it was not long till I was relieved. Now I do all my own work and help others. I sure praise Lydia E. Pinkham's medicines to any one I meet that is suffering from similar troubles. I think if mothers with girls would give it to them when they come to womanhood it would make them stronger. People who have known me all my life are astonished to see me now as I was always sickly when in my 'teens until I started taking the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. MARY R. BENEDICT, 813 Payson Street, Kewanee, Ill.

Has a Beautiful Baby Girl Now

Bridport, Vermont.—"In the first place I wanted a baby, but none seemed to come to me. I just love children and my husband is away all day, so I was not happy at all. A doctor told me I could not have a baby until I went to a hospital. But my sisters said, 'Take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and you will be O.K.' I was nervous, had organic weakness, with backache, sideache, headache and no strength. I had been in bed nearly a week when I began taking the Vegetable Compound. It was all that ever helped me and I just wish you could see my beautiful baby girl. I am fine now, and so is she. I am still taking the medicine as it keeps me well. You may be sure I am recommending the Vegetable Compound and always will."—Mrs. A. W. HOWE, Bridport, Vermont.

Human Ashes Weigh Little

Cremation is rapidly becoming a burial custom with many families who, a decade ago, were prejudiced against it. In the larger cities this is especially true. The ashes of a human body weigh about two pounds and a container equal in size to a two-quart measure is usually necessary to preserve the remains.

Foolish ideas prosper for years. Sometimes, it takes a later generation to explode them.

BUDGET OFFICER PLAN IS FAVORED

Object Is to Allow Sufficient Time for Study of the State Appropriations.

St. Paul—Giving an incoming governor of Minnesota an opportunity to get acquainted with the state budget a month before he is inaugurated met with favor when the civil administration committee of the senate discussed the proposed budgetary plan in the reorganization bill prepared by the interim committee.

The committee tentatively fixed the following dates for the preparation and completion of the budget before it is sent by the governor to the legislature:

The director of the budget should receive from all department heads their estimates for the next biennium by September 1 of the year preceding the legislative session.

On December 1, after three months' study by the budget commissioner, he shall turn over his budget figures to the governor. If a new governor is to take office on the first of the year, this budget will be given to the incoming governor.

As soon after his inauguration as is possible, the new governor would send the budget to the legislature.

The committee did not definitely approve this procedure, but favored these dates tentatively, subject to more detailed discussion and final action later on.

A method of handling the state budget such as the committee discussed would be a considerable change from the procedure under the present law. Now all state departments submit their estimates of expenditures for a forthcoming biennium to the governor on December 1. The governor then is supposed to go through the items and place the budget as he approves it before the legislature not later than February 1.

"We found that there are many inequalities of salaries among the state departments for substantially the same class of work," said Lieutenant Governor W. I. Nolan, who sat with the committee as chairman of the interim committee. "The same situation existed in Pennsylvania before the reorganization of departments was made there."

The action of the bill empowering the director of personnel in the department of administration and finance to set up a civil service system so that state employes may be selected from eligibility lists upon examination, has been left for the legislature to prepare, Mr. Nolan explained.

BILL TO CURB AUTO DEATHS

Four Bills Given Legislators—Seven-Year Terms Proposed.

St. Paul—Four bills aimed at the drunken and careless automobile driver in an effort to curtail the rising toll of automobile fatalities were submitted to members of the state legislature for introduction. The four bills include:

A measure which establishes a new degree of manslaughter to be known as third degree manslaughter, and under which the penalty is limited to imprisonment for seven years or $5,000 fine, or both.

A measure which makes a drunken driver guilty of a gross misdemeanor when he causes injury and makes him guilty of a felony when he causes death. In the first case the punishment would be six months or $500 or both, and in the second case the penalty would be up to seven years.

A measure calling upon drivers to report accidents, and making failure to do so a misdemeanor.

A measure which makes the driver who fails to stop after an accident guilty of a gross misdemeanor when he causes injury and guilty of a felony punishable by three years' imprisonment or $1,000 fine or both when he causes death.

MINNESOTA BRIEFS

Jordan—A record in land values was established by the sale of a 10 acre fruit farm near Shakopee, owned by Benjamin Hanson, to Harry Dressen for $4,500. Mr. Dressen has announced he will operate a chicken ranch on the tract in connection with fruit raising.

Thief River Falls—Rapid progress was made by the legislative committee investigating state rural credit loans in this vicinity during the session when more than 20 farmers, professional and business men were examined by the various members of the committee.

St. Cloud — A Minneapolis firm has entered the lists of possible purchasers of the Pandolfo Manufacturing company, J. C. Crever, one of the trustees of the company's bondholders, announced. Three other offers have been received. One of the firms listing a bid contemplates the establishment of a radio parts factory.

Minneapolis — Dairying in Minnesota is making rapid strides, annual reports from a number of creameries throughout the state show. In almost every community reports of creameries reveal that 1924 was one of the best years on record, both for increased business and higher receipts for products.

Austin — The Business Men's Association has decided to put on an automobile show and manufacturers' exhibit this spring. Retail merchants also will be represented in a division of the show, which is to take the place of the annual civic celebration.

DELAY CAR TAX PENALTY

100,000 Motorists Heave Sigh of Relief as Bill Fixes March 1st As Dead Line.

St. Paul—Automobile owners of the state have until March 1 to pay their 1925 taxes.

Governor Christianson, late Friday, signed a bill passed by the legislature earlier in the day, granting an extension on the time to obtain automobile licenses. The law changes the deadline for this year only, from February 15 to March 1.

When Governor Christianson's name was attached to the bill, formally making it a law, a sigh of relief undoubtedly went up from between 50,000 and 100,000 motorists who had postponed the annual task of obtaining licenses.

As an aftermath, many legislators are trying to figure out whether they are doing the right thing by granting such an extension of the time limit. At the last session of the legislature a similar reprieve was allowed. This year the legislature succumbed once again to the importunings of the car owners.

An indication of the sentiment against extension of time for paying the license fees is found in the roll calls of both house and senate, with a few negative votes recorded. Five senators voted against the extension and eight house members. They, one and all, said they did so merely as a matter of principle and not from any intent to embarrass procrastinating automobile owners.

INTERIM REPORT INTRODUCED

House and Senate Measures Embody All Essentials of Committee Plan.

St. Paul—Incorporating the recommendations of the interim committee for the reorganization of the state government, the bill making these changes effective was introduced in both branches of the Minnesota legislature.

"This reorganization plan clothes the governor with no additional powers over state activities than at present save in the matter of expenditures where his control will be absolute," Governor Christianson said.

The bill which closely follows the lines of the report but with several minor changes was introduced in the house by Representatives W. I. Norton, O. K. Dahle and J. B. Gislason, and in the senate by Senator Claud MacKenzie.

The bill does not include any outstanding changes of the interim committee report, which recommends that government activities be placed in the hands of 10 departments, the heads of which are to be appointed by the governor and an ex-officio board to be known as the executive council.

DANCE BILL PASSES HOUSE

Votes 1 A. M. Closing After Hearing Dorothy Ellingson Diary.

St. Paul—By a vote of 92 to 31 the house voted to pass the Paige dance bill, providing for the closing of public dance halls not later than 1 a. m.

Reading of extracts from the diary of Dorothy Ellingson, San Francisco girl, under indictment for the murder of her mother, because she was refused the right to attend dances, figured in the discussion of the bill before passage.

The bill was introduced in the house by Mabeth Hurd Paige, woman representative from Minneapolis and was amended so as to extend the time of closing from midnight until 1 a. m.

Two other bills were passed by the house, one a senate file, fixing the salaries of county treasurer and clerk hire in offices in certain counties in the state and the other a bill to extend certain state timber permits, introduced by Representatives Cullum and Scribner.

OFFER "ONE DAY REST" BILL

Drafted to Meet Criticisms of Law Held Invalid by Court.

St. Paul—A "one day rest in seven" bill which its authors believe will meet the criticism of the courts which resulted in a similar bill being declared unconstitutional last year, was introduced in the house of representatives by Representative Frank Starkey of St. Paul and other labor legislators.

Two years ago the "one day rest in seven" law was passed by the legislature, but when a test case was brought in Hennepin county district court, Judge H. D. Dickinson held the law was unconstitutional and he was upheld by the supreme cort.

Judge Dickinson's criticism was that the law was so drawn that it discriminated against certain industries which, by their very nature, are required to be opearted seven days a week.

Windom — Business men of Windom have organized a retail credit association which will begin operations March 1.

Le Sueur—The congregation of the Presbyterian church has received a pulpit Bible as first prize in the nationwide "get out the vote" contest conducted by a national church magazine. The church achieved a record of 98 per cent attendance at the polls at the last election.

Clinton — An eagle measuring 6 feet 6 inches from tip to tip and weighing 60 pounds was caught in a coyote trap by T. E. Lewis on his ranch near Clinton. Both legs were in the trap when the trapper made his rounds and he was able to take the bird alive.

M., in Book 110 of Mortgages, on page 355;

And whereas, the said Jacob Kaldunski, the assignee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the Power of Sale therein contained; and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice, the sum of Three Thousands Dollars ($3000.00), with accumulated interest from the 25th day of October 1922 at the rate of six and one-half percent per annum. Less Eighty-seven and 88-100 Dollars ($87.88) paid on December 10th, 1923 for and on account of interest; and whereas the said Power of Sale has become operative and no action or proceedings having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

NOW THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz:

East Half Southwest Quarter (E½ SW¼) East Half Northwest Quarter (E½ NW¼), of Section number Thirty-five (35), in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North of Range Forty-two (42) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota.

Which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County at the Front door of the County Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 7th day of April 1925 at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the amount then due on said mortgage and all delinquent taxes, if any, paid on said described premises, together with the costs and disbursements of such sale and Seventy-five Dollars attorneys fees stipulated in said Mortgage in cases of foreclosure.

Dated February 16th, 1925.

JACOB KALDUNSKI,
Assignee of Mortgagee.

WHY BANKS?

REVIEW

By J. H. PUELICHER, Chairman,
Committee on Public Education, American Bankers Association.

Those who have been reading these lessons have found banks to be semi-public corporations, chartered, regulated, and examined by State or Nation, but owned by private stockholders.

J. H. Puelicher

We found that banks
1. Receive deposits.
2. Make loans.

We found deposits to be of two kinds—
1. Savings Deposits.
2. Commercial Deposits.

We found that interest is paid on Savings Deposits; that the people's savings loaned by banks to farmers, merchants, manufacturers, produce wages and profits, which make more savings.

We found that were it not for the savings of the past, there could not be capital with which to build schools, railroads, ships, telephone and telegraph lines, factories, and the many things which are a part of civilization.

We found that the banker pays the savings depositor interest for the use of his savings and that he loans these to business but charges business more interest than he pays the saver, so that he could pay his overhead expenses, absorb occasional losses and pay dividends.

We found that bank stock is sold in order to provide capital for the establishing of the bank; that a stockholder in a bank is compelled to pay, in case the bank should fail and the assets not be enough to pay depositors, an amount up to 100 per cent of his stock; that anyone who is able to buy and willing to assume the risk, may purchase bank stock when it is for sale; and that the banks of America are owned by many men and women scattered throughout the country, who have purchased bank stock.

We found that banks render in these ways essential economic services to their communities.

We are now selling our butter through the Minnesota Co-Operative Creameries Assn., Inc. and our aim should be to MAKE a Land O' Lakes product.

To produce Land O' Lakes quality everything should be kept clean and all utensils must be scalded well. Cool the cream quickly in water, the year around, stirring while cooling. To deliver cream often is very important. If you live far from town you should club together with your neighbors. You dont realize what a difference there is in making butter from cream delivered 2 times a week, and cream delivered weekly— even tho your week old cream is sweet. Let us get into the Land O' Lakes class and we shall be well paid for it.

What our Authorized De Laval Service means to you

— It means that we have fulfilled the requirements of The De Laval Separator Company to render service.

— It means that every De Laval Cream Separator in this community can now be kept at 100% efficiency at all times.

— It means that you can bring in your De Laval Separator to our store.

— It means that we have a competent and specially trained man who will overhaul it, replace such parts as may be necessary, and return it to you in first-class condition; all at a very reasonable charge.

Is your DeLaval separator in good running order?

IF it isn't, then you may be losing butter-fat and shortening the life of the machine; and ninety-nine times out of a hundred it isn't the fault of the machine but due to the fact that it needs attention, adjustment, cleaning, or the replacement of some part.

Bring in your De Laval Separator to us and we will put it in first-class running order. Bring in the complete machine, and in order to save expense clean out the oil chamber and gears with kerosene or boiling water. You can do this just as well as we can.

SICK WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Can Be Carried Comfortably Over The Critical Period by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound —Note Mrs. Headden's Case

Macon, Georgia.—"During the Change of Life I suffered with my whole right side and could not lie on my left side. I was in bed about two months and could not get up only as my son would lift me. After doctoring without relief a man who was rooming with us told my son that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cured his mother at the Change of Life, so I began taking your medicine. After taking it for two weeks I could get out of my bed by myself. I am now 53 years old and in better health and stronger than ever in my life. I have recommended the Vegetable Compound to many suffering women, young and old, and you may use my name anywhere as long as you please. I will be glad to answer any letters sent to me."—Mrs. F. B. Headden, 5 Holt Avenue, Macon Georgia.

In a recent country-wide canvass of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, over 200,000 replies were received and 98 out of every 100 reported they had been benefited by its use. For sale by druggists everywhere.

HIGH PRAIRIE

SYNOPSIS. — Introducing "So Big" (Dirk DeJong) in his infancy. And his mother, Selina DeJong, daughter of Simeon Peake, gambler and gentleman of fortune. Her life, to young womanhood in Chicago in 1888, has been unconventional, somewhat seamy, but generally enjoyable. At school her chum is Julie Hempel, daughter of August Hempel, butcher. Simeon is killed in a quarrel that is not his own, and Selina, nineteen years old and practically destitute, faces the question of earning a living.

It was, perhaps, because of this that the matter was pretty well hushed up. The publisher's paper—which was Chicago's foremost—scarcely mentioned the incident and purposely misspelled the name. The lady, thinking her task accomplished, had taken truer aim with her second bullet, and had saved herself the trouble of trial by human jury.

Simeon Peake left his daughter Selina a legacy of two fine, clear blue-white diamonds (he had had the gambler's love of them) and the sum of four hundred and ninety-seven dollars in cash. Just how he had managed to have a sum like this put by was a mystery. The envelope containing it had evidently once held a larger sum. It had been sealed, and then slit. On the outside was written, in Simeon Peake's fine, almost feminine hand: "For my little daughter Selina Peake in case anything should happen to me." It bore a date seven years old. What the original sum had been no one ever knew.

To Selina fell the choice of earning her own living or of returning to the Vermont village and becoming a withered and sapless dried apple, with black fuzz and mold at her heart, like her aunts, the Misses Sarah and Abbie Peake. She did not hesitate.

"But what kind of work?" Julie Hempel demanded. "What kind of work can you do?" Women—that is, the Selina Peakes—did not work.

"I—well, I can teach."

"Teach what?"

"The things I learned at Miss Fister's."

"You have to do something first—go to Normal, or teach in the country, don't you?—before you can teach in the public schools. They're mostly old. Twenty-five or even thirty—or more!" with nineteen's incapacity to imagine an age beyond thirty.

"Then I'll just teach a country school. I'm good at arithmetic. You know that." Julie should have known it, having had all her Fister sums solved by Selina. "Country schools are just arithmetic and grammar and geography."

"You! Teaching a country school!"

She looked at Selina.

She saw a misleadingly delicate face, the skull small and exquisitely formed. The cheek bones rather high—or perhaps they looked so because of the fact that the eyes, dark, soft and luminous, were unusually deep-set in their sockets. The face, instead of narrowing to a soft curve at the chin, developed unexpected strength in the jaw line. That line, fine, steel-strong, sharp and clear, was of the stuff of which pioneer women are made. Julie, inexperienced in the art of reading the human physiognomy, did not decipher the meaning of it. Selina's hair was thick, long and fine, so that she piled it easily in the loops, coils and knots that fashion demanded. Her nose, slightly pinched at the nostrils, was exquisite. When she laughed it had the trick of wrinkling just a little across the narrow bridge; very engaging, and mischievous. She was thought a rather plain little thing, which she wasn't. But the eyes were what you marked and remembered. Perhaps it was this velvety softness of the eyes that caused one to overlook the firmness of the lower face. When the next ten years had done their worst to her, and Julie had suddenly come upon her stepping agilely out of a truck gardener's wagon on Prairie avenue, a tanned, weather-beaten, toil-worn woman, her abundant hair skewered into a knob and held by a long gray hairpin, her full calico skirt grimed with the mud of the wagon wheel, a pair of men's old side-boots on her slim feet, a grotesquely battered old felt hat (her husband's) on her head, her arms full of ears of sweet corn, and carrots, and radishes, and bunches of beets, a woman with bad teeth, flat breasts, a sagging pocket in his capacious skirt—even then Julie, staring, had known her by her eyes. And she had run to her in her silk suit and her fine silk shirtwaist and her hat with the plume and had cried, "Oh, Selina! My dear! My dear!"—with a sob of horror and pity—"My dear!" And had taken Selina, carrots, beets, corn and radishes, in her arms. The vegetables lay scattered all about them on the sidewalk in front of Julie Hempel Arnold's great stone house on Prairie avenue. But strangely enough it had been Selina who had done the comforting, patting Julie's silken shoulder and saying, over and over, "There, there! It's all right, Julie. It's all right. Don't cry. What's there to cry for! Sh! . . . It's all right."

Chapter II

Selina had thought herself lucky to get the Dutch school at High Prairie, ten miles outside Chicago. Thirty dollars a month! She was to board at the house of Klaas Pool, the truck farmer. It was August Hempel who had brought it all about; or Julie, urging him. This was in September. High Prairie school did not open until the first week in November. In that region of truck farms every boy and girl over six was busy in the fields throughout the early autumn. Two years of this and Selina would be qualified for a city grade. August Hempel indicated that he could arrange that, too, when the time came. Selina thought this shrewd red-faced butcher a wonderful man, indeed. Which he was.

At forty-seven, single-handed, he was to establish the famous Hempel Packing company. At fifty he was the power in the yards, and there were Hempel branches in Kansas City, Omaha, Denver. At sixty you saw the name of Hempel plastered over packing sheds, factories, and canning plants all the way from Honolulu to Portland. You read:

"Don't Say Ham: Say Hempel's."

Hempel products ranged incredibly from pork to pineapple; from grease to grape-juice. Something of his character may be gleaned from the fact that farmers who had known the butcher at forty still addressed this millionaire, at sixty, as Aug. At sixty-five he took up golf and beat his son-in-law, Michael Arnold, at it. A magnificent old pirate, sailing the perilous commercial seas of the American '90s before commissions, investigations, and inquisitive senate insisted on applying whitewash to the black flag of trade.

Selina went about her preparations in a singularly clear-headed fashion, considering her youth and inexperience. She sold one of the blue-white diamonds, and kept one. She placed her inheritance of four hundred and ninety-seven dollars, complete, in the bank. She bought stout, sensible boots, two dresses, one a brown lady's-cloth which she made herself, finished with white collars and cuffs, very neat (the cuffs to be protected by black sateen sleevelets, of course, while teaching); and a wine-red cashmere (mad, but she couldn't resist it) for best.

She eagerly learned what she could of this region once known as New Holland. Its people were all truck gardeners, and as Dutch as the Netherlands from which they or their fathers had come. Many of them had come from the town of Schoorl, or near it. Others from the lowlands outside Amsterdam. Selina pictured it another Sleepy Hollow, a replica of the quaint settlement in Washington Irving's delightful tale. Picturing mellow golden corn fields; crusty crullers, crumbling oly-koeks, toothsome wild ducks, sides of smoked beef, pumpkin pies; country dances, apple-cheeked farmer girls, she felt sorry for poor Julie staying on in the dull gray commonplaceness of Chicago.

The last week in October found her on the way to High Prairie, seated beside Klaas Pool in the two-horse wagon with which he brought his garden stuff to the Chicago market. Mile after mile of cabbage fields, jade-green against the earth. Mile after mile of red cabbage, a rich plummy Burgundy veined with black. Between these, heaps of corn were piled-up sunshine. Against the horizon an occasional patch of woods showed the last russet and bronze of oak and maple. These things Selina saw with her beauty-loving eyes and she clasped her hands in their black cotton gloves.

"Oh, Mr. Pool!" she cried. "Mr. Pool! How beautiful it is here!"

Klaas Pool, driving his team of horses down the muddy Halsted road, was looking straight ahead, his eyes fastened seemingly on an invisible spot between the off-horse's ears. His was not the kind of brain that acts quickly, nor was his body's mechanism the sort that quickly responds to that brain's message. His eyes were china-blue in a round red face that was covered with a stubble of stiff golden hair. His round moon of a head was set low and solidly between his great shoulders, so that as he began to turn it now, slowly, you marveled at the process and waited fearfully to hear a creak. He was turning his head toward Selina, but keeping his gaze on the spot between his horse's ears. Evidently the head and the eyes revolved by quite distinct processes. Now he faced Selina almost directly. His pale blue eyes showed incomprehension.

"Beautiful?" he echoed, in puzzled interrogation. "What is beautiful?"

Selina's slim arms flashed out from the swathings of cloak, shawl, and muffler and were flung wide in a gesture that embraced the landscape on which the late afternoon sun was casting a glow peculiar to that lake region, all rose and golden and mist-shimmering.

"This! The—the cabbages."

A slow-dawning film of fun crept over the blue of Klaas Pool's stare. This film spread almost imperceptibly so that it fluted his broad nostrils, met and widened his full lips, reached and agitated his massive shoulders, tickled the round belly, so that all Klaas Pool, from his eyes to his waist, was rippling and shaking with slow, solemn, heavy Dutch mirth.

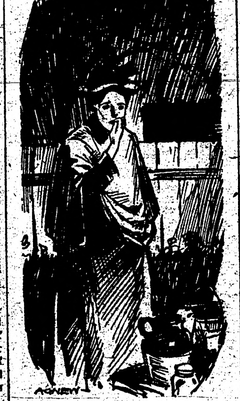
"Cabbages is beautiful!" his round pop eyes staring at her in a fixity of glee. "Cabbages is beautiful!" His silent laughter now rose and became audible in a rich throaty chortle. It was plain that laughter, with Klaas Pool, was not a thing to be lightly dismissed, once raised. "Cabbages—" he choked a little, and spluttered, overcome.

Selina laughed, too, even while she protested his laughter. "But they are!" she insisted. "They are beautiful. Like jade and Burgundy. No, like—uh—like—what's that in—like chrysoprase and porphyry. All those fields of cabbages and the corn and the beet-tops together look like Persian patches."

Which was, certainly, no way for a new school teacher to talk to a Holland truck gardener driving his team along the dirt road on his way to High Prairie. But then, Selina, remember, had read Byron at seventeen.

Klaas Pool knew nothing of chrysoprase and porphyry. Nor of Byron. Nor, for that matter, of jade and Burgundy. But he did know cabbages, both green and red. He knew cabbage from seed to sauerkraut; he knew and grew varieties from the sturdy Flat Dutch to the early Wakefield. But that they were beautiful; that they looked like jewels; that they lay like Persian patches, had never entered his head, and rightly. What has the head of a cabbage, or for that matter, of a robust, soil-stained, toiling Dutch truck farmer to do with nonsense like chrysoprase, with jade, with Burgundy, with Persian patterns!

The horses clopped down the heavy country road. Now and again the bulk beside Selina was agitated silently, as before. And from between the golden fuzz of stubble beard she would hear, "Cabbages! Cabbages is—" But she did not feel offended. She could not have been offended at anything today. For in spite of her recent tragedy, her nineteen years, her loneliness, the terrifying thought of this new home to which she was going, among strangers, she was conscious of a warm thrill of elation, of excitement—of adventure! That was it. "The whole thing's just a grand adventure," Simeon Peake had said. Selina gave a little bounce of anticipation. She was doing a revolutionary and daring thing; a thing that the Vermont and now, fortunately, inaccessible Peakes would have regarded with horror. For equipment she had youth, curiosity, a steel-strong frame; one brown lady's-cloth, one wine-red cashmere; four hundred and ninety-seven dollars; and a gay, adventuresome spirit that was never to die, though it led her into curious places and she often found, at the end, only a trackless waste from which she had to retrace her steps, painfully. But always, to her, red and green cabbages were to be jade and Burgundy, chrysoprase and porphyry. Life has no weapons against a woman like that.



Selina Stood Looking About Her in the Dim Light, a Very Small Figure in a Very Large World.

Klaas Pool was a school director. She was to live at his house. Perhaps she should not have said that about the cabbages. So now she drew herself up primly and tried to appear the school teacher, and succeeded in looking as severe as a white pansy.

"Ahem!" (or nearly that). "You have three children, haven't you, Mr. Pool? They'll all be my pupils?"

Klaas Pool ruminated on this. He concentrated so that a slight frown marred the serenity of his brow. In this double question of hers, an attempt to give the conversation a dignified turn, she had apparently created some difficulty for her host. He was trying to shake his head two ways at the same time. This gave it a rotary motion. Selina saw, with amazement, that he was attempting to nod negation and confirmation at once.

"You mean you haven't—or they're not?—or—?"

"I have got three children. All will not be your pupils." There was something final, unshakable in his delivery of this.

"Dear me! Why not? Which ones won't. Do tell me which ones will and which ones won't."

"Geertje goes to school. Jozina goes to school. Roelf works by the farm."

"How old is Roelf?" She was being school teacherly again.

"Roelf is twelve."

"Twelve! And no longer at school! But why not!"

"Roelf he works by the farm."

"Doesn't Roelf like school?"

"But sure."

"Don't you think he ought to go to school?"

"But sure."

Having begun, she could not go back. "Doesn't your wife want Roelf to go to school any more?"

"Maartje? But sure."

She gathered herself together: hurled herself behind the next question. "Then why doesn't he go to school, for pity's sake?"

Klaas Pool's pale blue eyes were fixed on the spot between the horse's ears. His face was serene, placid, patient.

"Roelf he works by the farm."

Selina subsided, beaten.

Dusk was coming on. The lake mist came drifting across the prairie and hung, a pearly haze, over the frost-nipped stubble and the leafless trees. It caught the last light in the sky and held it, giving to fields, trees, black earth, to the man seated stolidly beside the girl, and to the face of the girl herself an opalescent glow very wonderful to see. Selina, seeing it, opened her lips to exclaim again; and then, remembering, closed them. She had learned her first lesson in High Prairie.

* * * * * * *

The Klaas Pools lived in a typical High Prairie house. They had passed a score like it in the dusk. These sturdy Holland-Americans had built here in Illinois after the pattern of the squat houses that dot the lowlands about Amsterdam, Haarlem and Rotterdam. A row of pollards stood stiffly by the roadside. Yard and dwelling had a geometrical neatness like that of a toy house in a set of playthings.

Peering down over the high wheel Selina waited for Klaas Pool to assist her in alighting. He seemed to have no such thought. Having jumped down, he was throwing empty crates and boxes out of the back of the wagon. So Selina, gathering her shawls and cloak about her, clambered down the side of the wheel and stood looking about her in the dim light, a very small figure in a very large world. Klaas had opened the barn door. Now he returned and slapped one of the horses smartly on the flank. The team trotted obediently off to the barn. He picked up her little hide-bound trunk. She took her satchel. The yard was quite dark now. As Klaas Pool opened the kitchen door the red mouth that was the open draught in the kitchen stove grinned a toothy welcome at them.

A woman stood over the stove, a fork in her hand. The kitchen was clean, but disorderly, with the disorder that comes of pressure of work. There was a not unpleasant smell of cooking. Selina sniffed it hungrily. The woman turned to face them. Selina stared.

This, she thought, must be some other—an old woman—his mother, perhaps. But: "Maartje, here is school-teacher," said Klaas Pool. Selina put out her hand to meet the other woman's hand, rough, hard, calloused. Her own, touching it, was like satin against a pine board. Maartje smiled, and you saw her broken discolored teeth. She pushed back the sparse hair from her high forehead, fumbled a little, shyly, at the collar of her clean blue calico dress.

"Pleased to meet you," Maartje said, primly. "Make you welcome." Then, as Pool stamped out to the yard, slamming the door behind him, "Pool he could have come with you by the front way, too. Lay off your things." Selina began to remove the wrappings that swathed her—the muffler, the shawl, the cloak. Now she stood, a slim, incongruously elegant little figure in that kitchen. The brown lady's-cloth was very tight and basqued above, very flounced and bustled below. "My, how you are young!" cried Maartje. She moved nearer, as if impelled, and fingered the stuff of Selina's gown. And as she did this Selina suddenly saw that she, too, was young. The bad teeth, the thin hair, the careless dress, the littered kitchen, the harassed frown—above all these, standing out clearly, appeared the look of a girl.

"Why, I do believe she's not more than twenty-eight!" Selina said to herself in a kind of panic. "I do believe she's not more than twenty-eight."

She had been aware of the two pig-tailed heads appearing and vanishing in the doorway of the next room. Evidently her hostess was distressed because the school teacher's formal entrance had not been made by way of parlor instead of kitchen. She followed Maartje Pool into the front room. Behind the stove, tittering, were two yellow-haired little girls, Geertje and Jozina, of course. Selina went over to them, smiling. "Which is Geertje?" she asked. "And which Jozina." But at this the titters became squeals. They retired behind the round black bulwark of the wood-burner, overcome.

Here's a combination for you—a Vermont girl among Dutch truck-gardeners! Does she take root—or escape?

Oil Stains on Concrete

The bureau of standards says that it knows of no method that will entirely remove oil stains from concrete. The stains can be partly removed by soaking the concrete with gasoline, then taking up the excess by means of a porous material like blotting paper. By repeating this process several times at intervals a good portion of the oil can be removed.

Permanent roads are a good investment —not an expense

The High Cost of Postponing Permanent Highway Building

Poor motor roads stifle industry and agriculture; waste huge sums annually in high maintenance costs, and greatly increase gasoline, tire and repair bills.

There is not a state, not a county, not a community, that isn't paying a heavy price for having too few permanent roads.

There are still many sections of the country—even whole states—that are trying to operate twentieth century traffic over nineteenth century roads.

This is costing millions of dollars every year, and will keep on costing millions until we have well developed permanent highway systems everywhere.

Even what we often call the more progressive communities are far behind the demands of modern highway traffic with its 16,000,000 motor vehicles.

From the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Canada to Mexico, we need more Concrete roads—the roads for twentieth century traffic.

Your highway officials want to be of the greatest possible service to you. Get behind them with ways and means that will provide more Concrete roads and streets. Such an investment will pay you big dividends year after year.

SLASH BOARD OF CONTROL BUDGET

Executive Approves Idea of Continuing Road Building Without New Public Debts.

St. Paul — Gov. Theodore Christianson gave his support to the principle of issuing state highway bonds to refund existing county highway bonds which have been issued with the guarantee of the state under legislative authority. The governor declared that the refunding program now under consideration in the legislature seems to be the only practical idea advanced to permit continuation of state highway construction by caring for the bonds already outstanding without creating any new obligations.

"I believe the situation may be taken care of without creating any new state obligations," said Governor Christianson, "and in fact that the state may be saved some interest money by refunding these bonds at lower rates of interest."

The pruning ax of the present house appropriations committee came down with a resounding whack when the committee's board of control appropriation bill was completed for introduction in the lower branch of the legislature.

The bill reduced the board's two-year requests for the 18 institutions, totaling $7,880,250, to approximately $6,530,250, a reduction of $1,350,000. The senate finance committee, which previously had reported its bill for the board of control, reduced the amount asked by $300,000.

The reduction is more significant in view of the fact that the board itself had reduced its request $500,000 for the biennial period, as compared with the appropriation of two years ago.

Pension Funds Need Attention.

The state teachers' pension fund is announced to be "10 per cent solvent." The plan proposed for putting this fund on its feet would increase the state tax levy for the purpose tenfold, and make every teacher contribute $65 a year. Unless such a plan is legalized, the authorities say, it would be wise to wipe out the law entirely. Mothers' pensions from a state standpoint are in just as bad a fix. Eight years ago the system was established by law. County authorities were empowered to grant pensions to mothers who required aid in order to keep their children in school. The state was to pay $1 for every $2 paid out by the counties. Counties have been paying these allowances for eight years, but so far the state has not paid one cent. No legislature has made any appropriation for the purpose. Up to date the state is obligated to the counties in the sum of $1,432,543.25.

Ratifies Child Labor Amendment.

Ratification of the so-called "child labor" amendment by the Minnesota legislature was recommended by the house public welfare committee by a vote of 10 to 7. The action was taken after the committee had conducted two public hearings.

Progress Slow in Both Houses.

Six weeks of the session have passed and nothing of importance has even emerged from committee in either house, with the exception of the state institutions appropriation bill, sent out by the senate finance committee, and a 2 cent gasoline tax bill reported by the house motor vehicle committee. Progress compared with past sessions has been extremely slow. Important matters now being threshed out in committees include: Reorganization code prepared by the interim house committee. All the big appropriation bills. Child labor amendment to federal Constitution. Bills for regulation of motor buses. Highway bond refunding plans. Motor vehicle and gasoline taxes. Rural credits bond issue. The big job of the session is the reorganization plan of the interim committee. It was delayed by other work and by the illness of W. I. Norton, who was in charge of drafting the bill, and the bill only came into the two houses February 9.

Forestation Bill in House.

The bill, proposing an amendment to the constitution authorizing the legislature to enact laws to encourage reforestation has been advanced to the house calendar, following recommendation for passage by the house in committee of the whole.

The bill is similar to amendment No. 4, defeated in the last election.

Flood of Bills Pouring In.

Bills on every conceivable subject are pouring into the hoppers, some of them important but most of them trivial. All of them require disposition of some kind. Fully a thousand bills are waiting committee action, and hundreds more are on calendars and general orders.

Rural Credits Bill Nearly Ready.

Appointment of district appraisers to check the work of local appraisers and reduction of the 60 per cent loan limit are expected to be the two outstanding recommendations of the rural credits bureau investigation committee. A bill is before the legislature asking authorization for another $40,000,000 bond issue for activities of the bureau in the next two years. Members of the investigating committee indicated that a majority of the members would be in favor of financing the work of the bureau for another two years.

Outline Highway Program.

Lines are being drawn for the beginning of the highways construction encounter. Supporters of the compromise plan to issue 10 to 20 year serial bonds, for refunding the $33,600,000 county reimbursement bonds are confident their proposal will be adopted ultimately, although they recognize among the legislators a strong sentiment for reducing the motor vehicle taxes. Four distinct plans have been advanced by legislators seeking to solve the highway prolbem. They are:

Issurance over a 10 year period of refunding bonds to meet retirements of the county reimbursement bonds, leaving the motor vehicle tax schedule undisturbed and adding a 1 cent or 2 cent gas tax. Leaving the motor vehicle tax undisturbed, setting up the gasoline tax as a fund to meet retirements of reimbursement bonds but issuing no bonds. Reducing the motor vehicle tax in proportion to the gasoline tax revenue and issuing no bonds. Imposing a 4 to 5 cent gasoline tax and reducing the motor vehicle tax to a nominal amount but issuing no new bonds. Mr. Babcock believes that the refinancing plan is the only one suggested which would enable the department to carry on effectively. All other plans suggested would curtail or cripple the department in development of the 7,000 trunk highway system. If the plan is adopted, Mr. Babcock said, the next two years would see completed important links in the system.

MINNESOTA BRIEFS

Windom — Business men of Windom have organized a retail credit association which will begin operations March 1.

St. James—Plans for a new Methodist church here, to be built at an estimated cost of $35,000, were accepted by the official board of the church.

Willmar—The Austin F. Hanscom post of the American Legion, ending its drive for members reported it "had gone over the top." The local post is one of the largest outside of the Twin Cities, having 316 members.

Norhtfield—Practically every line of endeavor is open to women of courage and ability who are unafraid of hard work, speakers at a women's vocational conference declared. College and high school girls attended the conference.

Duluth—Congressional authority to construct a $350,000 bridge linking Duluth and Superior will be asked immediately, it was indicated by J. B. Finch, an official of the newly organized Twin Ports Bridge Company.

Le Sueur Center—Reports read at the Le Sueur Center Farmers Co-operative Creamery Association showed that $263,684.40 was received for butter in 1924. An average of $600 per day was paid out to patrons, the reports showed.

Henderson — Sibley county's net gain under the Babcock highway plan was $264,379.87, according to official figures of the highway department. In the period in which the plan has been in operation, approximately four years, the county spent $457,118.47 in maintenance and improvement.

Montevideo—An innovation in church services was inaugurated at the First Methodist church here when the first of a series of addresses to be given by laymen took place, Mayor Jesse J. Brown spoke on "The Church and the Community." Other laymen talks will follow.

Montevideo—Plans for reopening the Chippewa County State Bank will be considered at a meeting. The call for the meeting has been issued by both groups of stockholders and depositors and it is stated that a new start toward the reorganization of this bank will be taken at this time.

Hallock—Roland Sutton immigration department patrolman, who shot and seriously wounded E. D. Ostenson, of this city, near Humboldt, Minn., when a car in which Ostenson was riding did not stop when ordered to, is held charged with second degree assault with a dangerous weapon.

Excelsior—T. A. Erickson of University Farm, the leader of potato club work in the state, announced that Romanzo Palmer of Excelsior, Lake Minnetonka, is the runner-up or reserve champion in the junior club competitions, Romanzo grew Green mountain potatoes which returns him a yield at the rate of 571.6 bushels to the acre.

Le Sueur Center—Large delegations, of the county, appeared before the county commissioners to urge road improvements. Among the projects involved are: The county line roads between New Prague and Henderson; a road from Lake Volney toward Kilkenny, and a project in Cleveland township.

Jordan—Merits of the bill requiring tuberculin tests for all cattle offered for sale in the state were discussed before the Scott County Holstein Breeders' association at its annual meeting here, by State Senator Henry Arndt of Jordan, chairman of the Senate Dairy products committee.

Balaton—Mrs. Louise Bickford Shequen of Balaton has been receiving gifts and congratulations upon having attained the advanced age of 107 years. Mrs. Shequen has the distinction of being one of Minnesota's oldest women, as well as being one of the oldest persons in the northwest.

WORLD PEACE IS NEARER, BELIEF

Coolidge Declares Nations Have Made Great Advances in Disarmament.

Washington.—Proportionately as the nations make progress in creating effective tribunals for peaceful settlement of international conferences they will find themselves able to lessen their military establishments, President Coolidge said in an address Monday to delegates to the women's conference on national defense as peace insurance.

"If the rule of law were established and certain, then there would be far less need of armaments," the president said. "So far as we advance toward security under the law, we shall be able to reduce the strength and cost of armaments."

Speaking to the delegates at the White House, the president made no direct reference to the pending move for another arms conference, but did take occasion to say "that a country so powerful in numbers and wealth, so fortunate in its location as our own, can and should set an example of moderation in armament and should invite others to pursue a similar program."

"The only enduring peace must be the peace of law, of order, of security and honor," he said. "Such a peace we wish for ourselves, and we devoutly wish to share it with every neighbor in the family of nations.

"Universal and assured peace under the law of nations is an ideal to which all of us are devoted. It is true that we have not stopped wars. But it also is true that there is today a more definite and more widely entertained conception than ever before, of the possibility to prevent war under an effective rule of law. This is the great advance. We have not reached the end; probably we shall not reach it for many generations. But it can hardly be doubted that the purpose and aspiration of human kind are definitely, intelligently and insistently enlisted in the effort to make war an impossibility in the world.

"But we are compelled to recognize that national safety requires such a measure of preparedness as shall be the guaranty against aggression, without committing the nation to militarism. For the present, the most we can hope is to secure general acceptance in good faith and without reservation of the view that whatever armaments we create, whatever preparations we make, shall be limited to the reasonable requirements of security."

LAST SUPPLY BILL REPORTED

Naval Construction, Fire Fighting, Oyster Probe Among Items.

Washington.—A deficiency appropriation bill carrying $54,426,562, or $476,674 less than budget estimates, was reported Monday by the house appropriations committee. It is the last supply measure of the session.

Items in the bill include $30,000,000 for naval construction; $1,342,700 for fighting fires in national forests, and $25,000 for the public health service to investigate the oyster industry, as a result of the recent typhoid situation.

Of the $30,000,000 allowed for naval construction, $9,000,000 would be used toward modernization of battleships; $14,000,000 for continuing construction of the aircraft carriers, Lexington and Saratoga; $3,000,000 for aircraft and accessories for these two ships, and $4,000,000 for beginning construction of six gunboats and two of the eight cruisers recently authorized by congress.

The committee allowed an additional $100,000 for prosecuting suits in connection with the naval oil reserve leases and $15,000 for payment of fees and expenses of witnesses testifying before a grand jury here in the new proceedings of Senator Wheeler, Democrat, Montana. The bill, however, did not carry $100,000 requested by the department of justice for further prosecution of war fraud cases.

Included in the bill are $150,000 to be used toward erection of a memorial to the women of the World war in the form of a building on the site of the American Red Cross building here.

New York.—Off color plays on Broadway, against which fair complaint seems to lie, will hereafter be passed upon by a "play jury" of 12 citizens, any nine of whom may either send the production to the storehouse or order it expurgated, without appeal of their decision. District Attorney Banton announced he had reached this decision after the plan was presented to him by spokesmen for more than 40 organizations, managers, playwrights, actors, and many impartial friends of the theatre.

New Radio Station at Dunwoody.

Minneapolis — The new 500-watt radio station of Dunwoody Institute, now under construction, will probably be ready for operation early in March, M. Reed Bass, assistant director of the institute, announced. Mr. Bass declared that the work is not being rushed, as every care is being taken to perfect one of the finest 500-watt stations in the country. The Dunwoody station, the equipment for which is owned by The Dayton Co., will give Minneapolis a second large broadcasting plant

Get rid of constipation by internal cleanliness

HEADACHES, biliousness, sleepless nights, heaviness, are Nature's warning that intestinal poisons are flooding your system. If this is allowed to continue, you may become a victim of serious organic disease.

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Why Physicians Favour Lubrication

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

Default having been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage containing a Power of Sale, by reason of which default said Power of Sale has become operative and the Assignees of the Mortgagee hereinafter named are authorized to declare the whole sum due and they hereby do declare said sum due, which mortgage was executed by Frank A. Gilbert, as Administrator of the Estate of Jannie M. Gilbert deceased, Mortgagor, to Holt State Bank, Holt, Minnesota, Mortgagee, dated May 17th, 1921 and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 28th day of May, A. D. 1921 at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 104 of Mortgages, on page 342,

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Holt State Bank, Holt, Minnesota, Mortgagee, to Deposit Trust & Savings Bank, by written assignment, dated June 2nd, A. D. 1921 and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 27th day of June, A. D. 1921 at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 98 of Mortgages, on page 558;

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Deposit Trust & Savings Bank, of Winona, Minnesota, to Mrs. Emma Lucht and Caroline Klippel, joint tenants, by written assignment, dated January 5th, 1925 and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 7th day of January A. D. 1925 at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book 110 of Mortgages, on page 350;

And whereas, the said Mrs. Emma Lucht and Caroline Klippel, the assignees and holders of said mortgage, have duly elected and do hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage, and the Power of Sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two Thousand Dollars ($2000.00) with accumulated interest from the 17th day of May 1921, at the rate of six and one-half per cent per annum; and whereas, the said Power of Sale has become operative and no action or proceedings having been instituted at law, or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof,

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz:

The Southeast Quarter (SE¼) of Section Seventeen (17), in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North of Range Forty (40) West, in Marshall County Minnesota.

Which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the Front door of the County Court House, at Warren, in said County and State, on the 3rd day of March, 1925 at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the amount then due on said mortgage and interest and all delinquent taxes, if any, on said premises, together with the costs and disbursements of such sale and Seventy-five Dollars Attorney's fees stipulated as attorneys fees in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

Dated January 12th, 1925.

Last week announcement was made of the largest egg deal in the history of Minnesota, so far as known, when A. W. Rogers, sales manager for the Minn. Co-op. Egg and Poultry Exchange made contracts for better than 800 cars of Minnesota fine eggs, at a handsome premium, with the best Eastern outlets in the country—Boston, Washington, New York, Providence and other cities of New England. The contracts call for spring and summer deliveries and start at once at the rate of four cars a week.

Norwegian immigration to America started a hundred years ago when fifty-three passengers arrived in New York from Stavanger, Norway. They crossed the Atlantic in a small sailing vessel of about forty-five tons. They left port July 4th and reached New York October 9th, and settled in Orleans county in that state. At the present time there are about two and one fourth million Norwegians in this country.

The State Board of Immigration has just published a very attractive book describing the north-western part of Minnesota. If anyone has relatives or friends who might be interested in this section of the state and will send their names and address to the above board, one of these books will be sent them free of charge.

PETROLEUM JELLY

Dolls of Long Ago

Every once in a while these modern days, the people of the world discover that some of their vaunted inventions are not so new after all.

Dr. George Byron Gordon, director of the University of Pennsylvania museum, said that the museum today contains specimens of dolls dating from 600 B. C.

In one collection there is a set of dishes—doll dishes—dating from 4500 B. C. There are toy chariots, toy horses, toy drivers.

Some people think three or four times before speaking once, then never say anything worth listening to.

ROELF POOL

SYNOPSIS. — Introducing "So Big" (Dirk DeJong) in his infancy. And his mother, Selina DeJong, daughter of Simeon Peake, gambler and gentleman of fortune. Her life, to young womanhood in Chicago in 1888, has been unconventional, somewhat seamy, but generally enjoyable. At school her chum is Julie Hempel, daughter of August Hempel, butcher. Simeon is killed in a quarrel that is not his own. Selina is nineteen years old and practically destitute. Selina secures a position as teacher at the High Prairie school, in the outskirts of Chicago, living at the home of a truck farmer, Klaas Pool.

Selina's quick glance encompassed the room. In the window were a few hardy plants in pots on a green-painted wooden rack. There was a sofa with a wrinkled calico cover; three rocking chairs; some stark crayons of incredibly hard-featured Dutch ancients on the wall. It was all neat, stiff, unlovely. But Selina had known too many years of boarding-house ugliness to be offended at this.

Maartje had lighted a small glass-bowled lamp. A steep, uncarpeted stairway, inclosed, led off the sitting room. Up this Maartje Pool, talking, led the way to Selina's bedroom. Selina was to learn that the farm woman, often inarticulate through lack of companionship, becomes a torrent of talk when opportunity presents itself.

A narrow, dim, close-smelling hallway, uncarpeted. At the end of it a door opening into the room that was to be Selina's. As its chill struck her to the marrow three objects caught her eyes. The bed, a huge and not unhandsome walnut mausoleum, reared its somber height almost to the room's top. The mattress of straw and cornhusks was unworthy of this edifice, but over it Mrs. Pool had mercifully placed a feather bed, stitched and quilted, so that Selina lay soft and warm through the winter. Along one wall stood a low chest so richly brown as to appear black. The front panel of this was curiously carved. Selina stooped before it and for the second time that day said: "How beautiful!" then looked quickly round at Maartje Pool as though fearful of finding her laughing as Klaas Pool had laughed. But Mrs. Pool's face reflected the glow in her own. She came over to Selina and stooped with her over the chest, holding the lamp so that its yellow flame lighted up the scrolls and tendrils of the carved surface. With one discolored forefinger she traced the bold flourishes on the panel. "See? How it makes out letters?"

Selina peered closer. "Why, sure enough! This first one's an S!"

Maartje was kneeling before the chest now. "Sure an S. For Sophia. It is a Holland bride's chest. And here is K. And here is big D. It makes Sophia Kroon DeVries. It is anyways two hundred years. My mother she gave it to me when I was married, and her mother she gave it to her when she was married, and her mother gave it to her when she was married, and her—"

"I should think so!" exclaimed Selina, rather meaninglessly; but stemming the torrent. "What's in it? Anything? There ought to be bride's clothes in it, yellow with age."

"It is!" cried Maartje Pool and gave a little bounce that imperiled the lamp.

"No!" The two on their knees sat smiling at each other, wide-eyed, like schoolgirls.

"Here—wait." Maartje Pool thrust the lamp into Selina's hand, raised the lid of the chest, dived expertly into its depths amidst a great rustling of old newspapers and emerged red-faced with a Dutch basque and voluminous skirt of silk; an age-yellow cap whose wings, stiff with embroidery, stood out grandly on either side; a pair of wooden shoes, stained terra-cotta like the sails of the Vollendam fishing boats, and carved from toe to heel in a delicate and intricate pattern. A bridal gown, a bridal cap, bridal shoes.

"Well!" said Selina, with the feeling of a little girl in a rich attic on a rainy day. She clasped her hands. "May I dress up in it sometime?"

Maartje Pool, folding the garments hastily, looked shocked and horrified. "Never must anybody dress up in a bride's dress, only to get married. It brings bad luck." Then, as Selina stroked the stiff silken folds of the skirt with a slim and caressing forefinger: "So you get married to a High Prairie Dutchman I let you wear it." At this absurdity they both laughed again. Selina thought that this school-teaching venture was starting out very well. She would have such things to tell her father—then she remembered. She shivered a little as she stood up now. There surged over her a great wave of longing for her father—for the theater treats, for his humorous philosophical drawl, for the Chicago streets, and the ugly Chicago houses; for Julie; for Miss Fister's school; for anything and any one that was accustomed, known, and therefore dear. She had a horrible premonition that she was going to cry, began to blink very fast, turned a little blindly in the dim light and caught sight of the room's third arresting object. A blue-black cylinder of tin sheeting, like a stove and yet unlike. It was polished like the length of pipe in the sitting-room below. Indeed, it was evidently a giant flower of this stem.

"What's that?" demanded Selina, pointing.

Maartje Pool, depositing the lamp on the little wash-stand preparatory to leaving, smiled pridefully. "Drum."

"Drum?"

"For heat your room." Selina touched it. It was icy. "When there is fire," Mrs. Pool added, hastily. Selina was to learn that its heating powers were mythical. Even when the stove in the sitting room was blazing away with a cheerful roar none of the glow communicated itself to the drum. It remained as coolly indifferent to the blasts breathed upon it as a girl hotly besieged by an unwelcome lover.

"Maartje!" roared a voice from belowstairs. The voice of the hungry male. There was wafted up, too, a faint smell of scorching. Then came sounds of a bumping and thumping along the narrow stairway.

"Og heden!" cried Maartje, in a panic, her hands high in air. She was off.

Left alone in her room Selina unlocked her trunk and took from it two photographs—one of a mild-looking man with his hat a little on one side, the other of a woman who might have been a twenty-five-year-old Selina, minus the courageous jaw-line. Looking about for a fitting place on which to stand these leather-framed treasures she considered the top of the chill drum, humorously, then actually placed them there, for lack of a better refuge, from which vantage point they regarded her with politely interested eyes. Perhaps they would put up a shelf for her. That would serve for her little stock of books and for the pictures as well. She was enjoying that little flush of exhilaration that comes to a woman, unpacking. She took out her neat pile of warm woolen underwear, her stout shoes. She shook out the crushed folds of the wine-colored cashmere. Now, if ever, she should have regretted its purchase. But she didn't. No one, she reflected, as she spread it rosily on the bed, possessing wine-colored cashmere could be altogether downcast.

From below stairs came the hiss of frying. Selina washed in the chill water of the basin, took down her hair and coiled it again before the swimmy little mirror over the wash-stand. She adjusted the stitched white bands of the severe collar and patted the cuffs of the brown lady's-cloth. The tight basque was fastened with buttons from throat to waist. Her fine long head rose above this trying base with such grace and dignity as to render the stiff garment beautiful. It was a day of appalling bunchiness and equally appalling tightness in dress; of panniers, galloons, plastrons, revers, bustles, all manner of lumpy bedevilment. That Selina could appear in this disfiguring garment a creature still graceful, slim, and pliant was a sheer triumph of spirit over matter.

She blew out the light now and descended the steep wooden stairway to the unlighted parlor. The door between parlor and kitchen was closed. Selina sniffed sensitively. There was pork for supper. She was to learn that there was always pork for supper.

She hesitated a moment there in the darkness. Then she opened the kitchen door. There swam out at her a haze of smoke, from which emerged round blue eyes, guttural talk, the smell of frying grease, of stable, of loam, and of woolen wash freshly brought in from the line. With an inrush of cold air that sent the blue haze into swirls the outer kitchen door opened. A boy, his arm piled high with stove-wood, entered; a dark, handsome sullen boy who stared at Selina over the armload of wood. Selina stared back at him. There sprang to life between the boy of twelve and the woman of nineteen an electric current of feeling.

"Roelf," thought Selina; and even took a step toward him, inexplicably drawn.

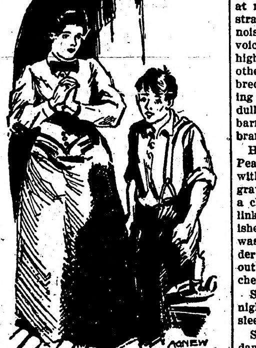
"Hurry then with that wood there!" fretted Maartje at the stove. The boy flung the armful into the box, brushed his sleeve and coat-front mechanically, still looking at Selina.

Klaas Pool, already at table, thumped with his knife. "Sit down, teacher." Selina hesitated, looked at Maartje. Maartje was holding a frying pan aloft in one hand while with the other she thrust and poked a fresh stick of wood into the open-lidded stove. The two pigtails seated themselves at the table, set with its red-checked cloth and bone-handled cutlery. Roelf flung his cap on a wall-hook and sat down. Only Selina and Maartje remained standing. "Sit down! Sit down!" Klass Pool said again, jovially. "Well, how is cabbages?" He chuckled and winked. A duet of titters from the pigtails. Maartje at the stove smiled; but a trifle grimly, one might have thought, watching her. Evidently Klass had not hugged his joke in secret. Only the boy Roelf remained unsmiling. Even Selina, feeling the red mounting to her cheeks, smiled a little, nervously, and sat down with some suddenness.

Maartje Pool now thumped down on the table a great bowl of potatoes fried in grease; a platter of ham. There was bread cut in chunks. The coffee was rye, toasted in the oven, ground, and taken without sugar or cream. Of this food there was plenty. It made Mrs. Tebbitt's Monday night meal seem ambrosial. Selina's visions of chickens, oly-koeks, wild ducks, crusty crullers, and pumpkin pies vanished, never to return. She had been very hungry, but now, as she talked, nodded, smiled, she cut her food into infinitesimal bites, did not chew them so well, and despised herself for being dainty.

"Well," she thought, "it's going to be different enough, that's certain. . . . This is a vegetable farm, and they don't eat vegetables. I wonder why. . . . What a pity that she lets herself look like that, just because she's a farm woman. Her hair screwed into that knob, her skin rough and neglected. That hideous dress. Shapeless. She's not bad looking, either. A red spot on either cheek, now; and her eyes so blue. A little like those women in the Dutch pictures' father took me to see in—where?—where?—New York, years ago?—yes. But that woman's face was placid. This one's strained. Why need she look like that, frowsy, horrid, old! . . . The boy is, somehow, foreign-looking — Italian. Queer. . . . They talk a good deal like some German neighbors we had in Milwaukee. They twist sentences. Literal translations from the Dutch, I suppose."

Jakob Hoogendunk, Pool's hired hand, was talking. Supper over, the men sat relaxed, pipe in mouth.



"Fields of Cabbages—What You Said—They Are Beautiful," He Stammered.

Maartje was clearing the supper things, with Geertje and Jozina making a great pretense at helping. If they giggled like that in school, Selina thought, she would, in time, go mad, and knock their pigtailed heads together.

Roelf, at the table, sat poring over a book, one slim hand, chapped and gritty with rough work, outspread on the cloth. Selina noticed, without knowing she noticed, that the fingers were long, slim, and the broken nails thin and fine.

Selina wanted, suddenly, to be alone in her room—in the room that but an hour before had been a strange and terrifying chamber with its towering bed, its chill drum, its ghostly bride's chest. Now it had become a refuge, snug, safe, infinitely desirable. She turned to Mrs. Pool. "I—I think I'll go up to my room. I'm very tired. The ride, I suppose. I'm not used . . ." Her voice trailed off.

"Sure," said Maartje, briskly. She had finished the supper dishes and was busy with a huge bowl, flour, a baking board. "Sure go up. I got my bread to set yet and what all."

"If I could have some hot water—"

"Roelf! Stop once that reading and show school teacher where is hot water. Geertje! Jozina! Never in my world did I see such." She cuffed a convenient pigtail by way of emphasis. A wall arose.

"Never mind. It doesn't matter. Don't bother." Selina was in a sort of panic now. She wanted to be out of the room. But the boy Roelf, with quiet swiftness, had taken a battered tin pail from its hook on the wall, had lifted an iron slab at the back of the kitchen stove. A mist of steam arose. He dipped the pail into the tiny reservoir thus revealed. Then, as Selina made as though to take it, he walked past her. She heard him ascending the wooden stairway. She wanted to be after him. But first she must know the name of the book over which he had been poring. But between her and the book outspread on the table were Pool, Hoogendunk, dog, pigtails, Maartje. She pointed with a determined forefinger. "What's that book Roelf was reading?"

Maartje thumped a great ball of dough on the baking board. Her arms were white with flour. She kneaded and pummeled expertly. "Woorden boek."

Well. That meant nothing. Woorden boek. Woorden b— Dimly the meaning of the Dutch words began to come to her. But it couldn't be. She brushed past the men in the tipped-back chairs, stepped over the collie, reached across the table. Woorden—word. Boek—book. Word book. "He's reading the dictionary!" Selina said, aloud. "He's reading the dictionary!" She had the horrible feeling that she was going to laugh and cry at once; hysteria.

Selina flung a good-night over her shoulder and made for the stairway. He should have all her books. She would send to Chicago for books. She would spend her thirty dollars a month buying books for him. He had been reading the dictionary!

Roelf had placed the pail of hot water on the little wash-stand and had lighted the glass lamp. He was intent on replacing the glass chimney within the four prongs that held it firm. Downstairs, in the crowded kitchen, he had seemed quite the man. Now, in the yellow lamplight, his profile sharply outlined, she saw that he was just a small boy with tousled hair. About his cheeks, his mouth, his chin, one could even see the last faint traces of soft infantile roundness.

"He's just a little boy," thought Selina, with a quick pang. He was about to pass her now, without glancing at her, his head down. She put out her hand; touched his shoulder. He looked up at her, his face startlingly alive, his eyes blazing. It came to Selina that until now she had not heard him speak. Her hand pressed the thin stuff of his coat sleeve.

"Cabbages — fields of cabbages—what you said—they are beautiful," he stammered. He was terribly in earnest. Before she could reply he was out of the room, clattering down the stairs.

Selina stood, blinking a little.

The glow that warmed her now endured while she splashed about in the inadequate basin; took down the dark soft masses of her hair; put on the voluminous long-sleeved, high-necked nightgown. Just before she blew out the lamp her last glimpse was of the black drum stationed like a patient eunuch in the corner; and she could smile at that; even giggle a little, what with weariness, excitement and a general feeling of being awake in a dream. But once in the vast bed she lay there utterly lost in the waves of terror and loneliness that envelop one at night in a strange house amongst strange people. She listened to the noises that came from downstairs; voices gruff, unaccustomed; shrill, high. These ceased and gave place to others less accustomed to her city-bred ears; a dog's bark and an answering one; a far-off train whistle; the dull thud of hoofs stamping on the barn floor; the wind in the bare tree branches outside the window.

Her watch—a gift from Simeon Peake on her eighteenth birthday—with the gold case all beautifully engraved with a likeness of a gate, and a church, and a waterfall and a bird, linked together with spirals and flourishes of the most graceful description, was ticking away companionably under her pillow. She felt for it, took it out and held it in her palm, under her cheek, for comfort.

She knew she would not sleep that night. She knew she would not sleep—

She awoke to a clear, cold November dawn; children's voices; the neighing of horses; a great sizzling and hissing, and scent of frying bacon; a clucking and squawking in the barnyard. It was six o'clock. Selina's first day as a school teacher. In a little more than two hours she would be facing a whole roomful of round-eyed Geertjes and Jozinas and Roelfs. The bedroom was cruelly cold. As she threw the bedclothes aside Selina decided that it took an appalling amount of courage—this life that Simeon Peake had called a great adventure.

Anyway, Selina finds a kindred soul in Roelf, who also thinks cabbages beautiful.

Scientific Future Love

The matrimonial reports of our day are undertaking to put love on a sound, scientific basis. Let us skip a few hundred years and behold the synthetic romance of a youth and a maid of some generations to come. The young man, armed with a stethoscope, a tape measure and the means of making a blood test, goes to call upon the lady whose charms have attracted him. He taps a vein, listens to the thump of her heart and to the wind whistling through her bronchial tubes and ends his labors with a careful examination of the soles of her feet. Satisfied with the showing he makes a request for a kiss and obtains one, duly hygienized through a strainer whipped from a vanity bag. That is, he does unless the young woman wallops him instead.—Toledo Blade.

Mozart

It is doubtful if anybody knows the exact spot where Mozart is buried. A violent storm was raging at the time of the funeral, and the hearse went its way unaccompanied to the churchyard, and his body was committed in the paupers' corner. In 1859 the city of Vienna erected on the probable spot a monument to his memory.

An elephant was walking in a jungle when he came to a pheasant's nest and found that the mother-bird had flown away. The small birds looked very lonely and cold and hungry.

"Poor little things," said the elephant, in a sentimental voice. "They have no mother." And down he sat on the nest.

A COVINGTON, KY., WOMAN

Makes Remarkable Recovery

Mrs. Harry Ashcroft Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Relieved Her of Severe Illness and Pain

MRS. HARRY ASHCROFT
632 BEECH AVENUE, COVINGTON, KY.

Covington, Ky.—"I was so weak and nervous I could hardly do my housework as I could not stand because of the bearing-down pains in my back and abdomen. I sat down most of the time and did what I could do in that way—as washing dishes, etc. One day a book describing Lydia E. Pinkham's medicines was put in my mail box. I saw how the Vegetable Compound had helped others so I gave it a trial. I had to take about a dozen bottles before I gained my strength, but I certainly praise this medicine. Then I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine for poor blood. I was cold all the time. I would be so cold I could hardly sit still and in the palms of my hands there would be drops of sweat. I also used the Sanative Wash and I recommend it also. You may publish this letter and I will gladly answer letters from women and advise my neighbors about these medicines."—Mrs. HARRY ASHCROFT, 632 Beech Avenue, Covington, Kentucky.

Mrs. Boyer Also Found Help

Gilman City, Missouri.—"I was in such a condition that I could not eat nor sleep to do me any good and I felt draggy all the time. My head ached, my right side and back would almost kill me at times, and I could be on my feet only a short while at a time. I was irregular and so nervous, irritable and despondent that I thought I could not stand the strain much longer. I had been this way more or less for ten years, but the last two years was just terrible. I took medicines, but got little relief until I began to take the Vegetable Compound. I took three bottles before I could see any change at all. I have taken seven in all and am improving right along. I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash and take the Liver Pills. I can do most of my work now, and I live on a farm and there is lots of it to do. I wash, iron, hoe the garden, raise chickens and tend to the milk."—Mrs. T. M. BOYER, Gilman City, Missouri.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

(©, 1925, Western Newspaper Union.)

The buoyancy of health is real enjoyment. Strength, mental vigor, vivacity and good nature spring from a good digestion; good digestion is secured only from eating and drinking proper quantities of food and liquid. It is possible to enjoy buoyancy of spirit and good appetite every day.

SAVORY GOOD THINGS

Try pork sausages in place of pork when baking beans. It is a change and will be well liked.

Haricot of Mutton.—Fry two tablespoonfuls of onions in two tablespoonfuls of sweet drippings, add one and one-half pounds of lean mutton, cut into two-inch pieces, salt and pepper well and cover with boiling water. Cook slowly until the meat is tender. Serve with buttered lima beans.

Spanish Toast.—Cut up two green peppers, a slice of onion, two sprigs of parsley and add a cupful of thick tomato sauce. Simmer until smooth. Toast rounds of bread, butter and put a spoonful of the tomato mixture on top of each with a poached egg on top.

Chicken a la King.—Take two cupfuls of cooked chicken, four fresh mushrooms, one tablespoonful of butter, one-fourth of a green pepper, one cupful of thin cream, one cupful of chicken broth, three tablespoonfuls of flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth teaspoonful of paprika, one teaspoonful of lemon juice. Cut the chicken into cubes, break the mushroom caps and cut the stems, chop the green pepper, add the cream, chicken stock and egg yolks. Cook the mushrooms and green pepper in the butter, and the flour and combine with the other ingredients.

Windsor Sandwiches.—Cream one-third of a cupful of butter, add one-half cupful each of chopped chicken and ham (the ham boiled and the chicken left from roast). Season with paprika and salt and spread the mixture on slices of buttered bread, cut into fancy shapes. Serve either open or double sandwiches. If open decorate with a border of mayonnaise.

Pepper Lilies.—Take small bell-shaped green peppers, cut into points nearly down to the stem. Remove the seeds and white fiber and fill with a ball of seasoned cream cheese. Decorate the top of the ball with riced hard-cooked egg yolk and arrange on lettuce to serve. Pass a bowl of mayonnaise.

Special Good Things.

Some day when nothing seems to appeal to the appetites, for a simple dessert try:

Spiced Bananas.—One can use the unripe fruit for this dish, as the cooking softens and ripens it. Take two teaspoonfuls each of allspice and cinnamon, one-half cupful of water, one-half cupful of lemon or orange juice or a mixture, one cupful of sugar, set over the fire and let come to the boiling point. Add six bananas, cook until tender but not broken. Serve on a hot platter with the sauce poured over them.

Chocolate Junket.—Grate unsweetened chocolate (two tablespoonfuls), and add to a pint of lukewarm milk, after it has been melted over steam. Dissolve half of a junket tablet in a tablespoonful of water, add to the milk and stir well; also add three tablespoonfuls of sugar, mix and pour into sherbet cups; let stand in a warm place to thicken. Serve topped with sweetened and flavored whipped cream.

Celery au Jus.—Remove the tops from two bunches of celery, wash and trim and scrape. Cook in acidulated water, boiling five minutes, then drain. Melt three tablespoonfuls of butter, add three tablespoonfuls of flour and a cupful and a half of the celery liquor. Season with salt and pepper and a few drops of worcestershire sauce; add the celery and simmer thirty minutes. Arrange the celery in the center of a hot dish, strain the sauce over it and garnish with finely chopped red pepper.

Orange and Nut Bread.—Sift together five cupfuls of pastry flour, one cupful of graham flour, one teaspoonful of salt, six teaspoonfuls (level) of baking powder and one cupful of sugar; add one-half cupful each of candied orange peel and pecan meats, chopped; mix well. Beat one egg and add with one cupful of milk to the first mixture. Turn into a buttered brick bread pan and bake forty minutes in a moderate oven. Serve as sandwiches with marmalade and tea.

Plum Pudding.—Take two pounds each of raisins and currants, one-half pound each of chopped blanched almonds and shredded citron, two pounds each of bread crumbs, suet and flour, three lemons, six well-beaten eggs, two pounds of brown sugar, four grated nutmegs, one tablespoonful each of salt and mixed spices and sufficient milk to moisten. Mix and let stand overnight. Strain the lemon juice before adding to avoid seeds. Divide into bowls, tie in a cloth and boil steadily for eight hours. Steam an hour before serving. Serve with an egg sauce. eat eggs, add sugar, flavoring and, just before serving, hot milk. Two eggs, one cupful of milk and one-fourth cupful of sugar, flavoring to taste.

PROFITS IN Southern Farming

Write to W. E. Price, General Immigration Agent, Southern Railway, Washington, D. C., for full information about How to Make Money on Southern Farms.

The alluvial soils of the valley lands of the Appalachian Mountain range, the strong clay soils of the Piedmont Plateau and the sandy loams of the Coastal Plain offer varieties of farming conditions to meet any requirement. Mild climate, long grazing season, convenient markets, delightful living conditions, improved roads, good schools. The general farmer, dairyman, fruit-grower or truck farmer can find large or small properties, suited to his needs, at low prices and on easy terms. Room 661.

Must Discard Clothing

Europeans and Americans who want to travel or study in the tropics must get over the bashfulness of going without clothes, according to Prof. P. F. Fyson of Berhampore, Bengal. The tropics will never be colonized by Americans or Europeans until they decide to live with the native dress. Clothing, he maintains, interferes with the natural regulating action of the skin and makes it impossible for the northerners to stand the climate.

Education will do little for a defective mind, but training accomplishes wonders.

Most headaches due to lack of internal cleanliness

WHEN you are constipated, poisons form in the accumulated food waste and are carried to all parts of the body. Headaches follow. Biliousness, insomnia, lack of energy, all result from constipation, which if unchecked will lead to serious results.

Avoid Laxatives—Say Doctors

A noted authority says that laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition.

Medical science has found in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative, and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

His Two Objects

E. H. Simmons, the new president of the New York Stock exchange, was defending the American business man. Mr. Simmons, nephew of the late E. H. Harriman, said:

"Our highbrows accuse the American business man of having only one object in life—namely, the resolve to be a millionaire at thirty-five. This is false, utterly false. The American business man has two objects in life.

"His first object, admittedly, is the resolve to be a millionaire at thirty-five. His second and far more aspiring object is the resolve to be a multimillionaire at forty."

Troubled With Bronchitis?

Christine, N. Dak.—"I read about the 'Golden Medical Discovery' in the papers and thought I would try it. I was told by others it was such a wonderful medicine. I was attending high school but had to quit as my nerves went back on me. Then I caught an awful cold and it turned into bronchitis. I started taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I used about four boxes of the tablets when I was entirely well. For my part I can say that Dr. Pierce's medicines are wonderful."—Miss Asta Pederson. All medicine dealers. Tablets or liquid.

WOMAN'S COURAGE FOILS BANDITS

Grapples With Armed Robbers Who Attempt to Hold Up Her Bank.

UNARMED, WINS LONG FIGHT

One Bandit Killed and Other Wounded When Men Come to Rescue—Story Told at National Meeting of Bankers.

When the wave of crime against banks, which has reached unprecedented proportions, was under discussion at the recent meeting of the American Bankers Association at Chicago, and defense measures were up for consideration, the bankers were told how one resolute woman defended herself against two armed desperadoes in her little Western bank. The woman was Mrs. Mary Garlinghouse, cashier of the State Bank of Vera, Oklahoma, which she conducts single-handed. Her own story, as she told it in a report to the protective authorities of the Association, follows:

"While I was posting my ledger, with my back to the door, I heard a commotion. When I turned around there were two men back of the counter, with handkerchiefs over their faces. The larger made a jump for my gun, before I realized what was happening. The robbers each had a gun pointed at me, and one said, 'Lay down or I will shoot you!' I said, 'I will not lay down and you will not shoot me.' This conversation was repeated several times. I told them to cut out their foolishness.

"A man who was in the corridor when the bandits came laid down on the floor, face down. I tried to argue with the robbers and they began to get rough, but something within me seemed to realize that they were getting confused. I kept thinking that some one would come in or see us.

"The larger man got busy with the money, while the smaller one took care of me. He jerked me to my knees and hit me over the head. This jolted my glasses and I lifted my hand, waving it in front of his face and telling him to wait a minute. I took my glasses off and put them on the table. Lifting my hand caused this man to look up and he saw we were observed from across the street. Then he saw Constable Mosby, with his gun, and said to the man who was gathering the money, 'Don, we are seen, we must make our getaway!' He then grabbed me rather roughly and said: 'Come on here! You are coming along!'

Struggles With Robber

"Here is where our struggle began. All the time we fought over his gun. I did not try to take it away from him, but kept moving it from one side to the other, and of course he was determined to point it straight at me. I told him, 'I will not go and I am not afraid of you. You will not shoot me!'

"We fought to back door of the bank. When we got there, he raised his arm to fire at Mosby. I grabbed him around the neck, and he fired before I could get his hand. I am positive that this man was never hugged so tightly, nor ever will be, as I hugged him, realizing that I must fight for my life. The man tried his level best to kill me. What the other man was doing I do not know. My man was trying to pull me out the back door to their car, which was still running. I was determined he should not.

"R. C. Lapsley, the mayor, or Ed Mosby shot the man in the arm. There was a jerk and out the door we went. Things were coming my way now. I pulled the robber into the weeds half on his back and half on his left side.

"The robber finally said, 'I will give up.' I said, 'Give me your gun.' He answered, 'I will not: I know you will shoot me.' So the struggle kept on. We got back on our feet. I meant to have his gun and would fight him until I got it. We fought through the back room behind the counter. He begged me not to take him, and I asked him again for his gun and he said, 'No, I know you will shoot me.' We struggled through the front door and then Constable Mosby said, 'Drop your gun or I will shoot you.' The bandit gave up and the men took charge of him.

One Bandit Killed

"I wondered about the other bandit and started to look for him and found him in the closet in the back of the bank dying. R. C. Lapsley told me afterwards that when the bandit and I lurched through the back door the larger man, with his gun in his right hand and the sack of money in his left, stepped up to the door. They both fired at once. The robber dropped his gun and the money, but they could not see what became of him.

"If all towns had as brave men as we have here, bank robbing would be a thing of the past. You can understand the remarkable marksmanship that was displayed, when I tell you that in our struggle at the back of the bank the men took several shots at the robber, but were very careful not to hit me. The robber got a shot in his right arm and a glancing shot in his left.

"All during the shooting and fighting, I felt confident I would get the best of my man. I felt that the man would not shoot me, and like all Western women did not lose my nerve. Bank robbers, as a rule, are cowards and if one shows that he is not afraid of them they will lose their nerve."

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Four Hundred Forty-four and 38-100 Dollars ($444.48), which said amount includes the sum of One Hundred Seven and 48-100 Dollars ($107.48 paid by Deposit Bank and Trust Company to the County Treasurer of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 4th day of February, 1925, for taxes for the year 1923, including penalty and interest against the mortgaged property; which first mentioned sum is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Olaus Rodahl and Josie Rodahl, his wife, Mortgagors, to Deposit Trust and Savings Bank, (Winona, Minnesota) Mortgagee, bearing date the 25th day of October, 1920, and with a power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall, and State of Minnesota, on the 9th day of November, 1920, at 8:30 o'clock A. M., in Book 92 of Mortgages, on page 321;

Which said mortgage together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Deposit Trust and Savings Bank, Mortgagee, to Deposit Bank and Trust Company, by written assignment, dated the 30th day of July, 1923, and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds, on the 19th day of January, 1925, at eleven o'clock A. M., in Book 118, of Mortgages, on Page 59;

And whereas, The said Deposit Bank and Trust Company, the Assignee and Holder of said mortgage has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage, due and payable at the day of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of Four Thousand Four Hundred Forty-four and 38-100 Dollars (4,444.38); and whereas the said power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice Is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, that the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz:

The West Half of the Northwest Quarter, (W1-2 NW1 4), and the West Half of the Southwest Quarter, (W½ SW¼), of Section Thirty-five (35), in Township One hundred fifty-six (156), North of Range Forty-two (42), West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Warren, in said county and state, on the 11th day of April, 1925, at two o'clock P. M., of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of Four Thousand Four Hundred Forty-four and 38-100 Dollars ($4,444.38), and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises and Seventy-five Dollars ($75.00), attorneys fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law: subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

THE DULL GRAY THREEDECKERS

By DORA MOLLAN

(©, 1924, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

MARY closed the outside door behind her, the door which the Deans shared with two other families. It was the ugly gray door of an ugly gray house. As Mary walked down the steep grade of the sidewalk she passed, at regular intervals, other houses as like it as peas in a pod. They cluttered the hill like a litter of huge dingy packing-cases. One hundred, the specifications had called for, three stories high and housing six families each. There were no trees—roots damage walks; no vines—vines "rot wood." Some one had named the hill "Threedeckerdom," and the name stuck. It was the housing development of the Bates Loom works where Mary's father worked—and Mary hated it.

Mary had made plans to pull herself free from this environment, into which she had been born, before her roots took firm hold; and, as the appointed day drew near she found her courage weakening. After all, it meant leaving her father and mother—and Eddie. It was to strengthen her resolution that Mary had set out on that Saturday afternoon's walk.

At the foot of the hill lay a yet more densely populated neighborhood, a section of ancient, dirty houses bulging with children. Here Mary felt the impulse to hug still closer to her slender self the scanty folds of her blue frock.

Now straight ahead loomed a steep hill, crowned with a stately tower of stone modeled after a medieval castle to honor the memory of a famous man. Mary found the beginning of a dirt path at the foot of the hill and followed its winding rise to the top. Before her stood the tower; below her lay the city.

Gaining the battlemented observation platform, whence a spiral stairway led to the tip-top of the tower, Mary paused for a moment's rest. With her back to the city she looked first at the distant mountains. Beyond them, where the sun was already slipping, lay the city where she would find work and begin the struggle for the things she craved.

A sound from below intruded on Mary's thoughts. Footsteps on the stone stairway! Should she hurry to the top, or start down? The October twilight would be short. Yet if she should start down now she must pass him—for Mary felt sure it was a man.

The footsteps sounded on the last flight of steps now; still Mary stood irresolute.

"Eddie Morrissey!" Relief made Mary's cry one of joyful welcome—and yet, ten minutes before she would have desired anything but his coming.

"Mary! I thought I would find you here! Why is it, Mary? Some force seems to draw me straight to you!" Eddie was a slightly built boy with dreamy brown eyes. He spoke the name, "Mary," as though it were the word he loved best.

"Eddie, don't—please! I want to go to the top just for a few minutes, Eddie, alone. Then we will walk home together."

"That stairway is narrow and steep, Mary; better let me go with you," Eddie persisted. So together they climbed to the very top of the tower. As Mary looked down she felt that dizziness which comes of a great height; felt that horrible desire to fling herself out into space; to fall down—down—. She closed her eyes. Her body swayed. Then came Eddie's steadying hand on her arm and again she was glad he had come.

Mary opened her eyes to the glory of the setting sun. Now was the time to carry out her purpose in coming to the tower. She must turn from that miracle of color in the western sky to the clutter of dull gray threedeckers. On the top of this tower hate of their ugliness had first been born in her; here she would clinch her resolution to leave them forever.

But Eddie was a disturbing factor. Emboldened, he was slipping an arm around her waist. He was speaking, and the word "love" occurred often. She couldn't find it in her heart to rebuke him, for surely his years of devotion deserved one memory. It dimmed the clearness of her vision. Mary felt herself drifting into a great peace and content there, on the top of the world, alone with Eddie. It was an anesthesia from which she must arouse herself, for marrying Eddie would mean staying on the desecrated hill of drab tenement houses. . . .

So Mary turned her eyes toward the east and saw—a reflection of the sunset, all pastel grays and pinks and blues! She saw a thin, nebulous mist enshrouding the hill—and gasped at the sheer beauty of it all. For behind that translucent curtain lay, not a huddle of dingy domiciles, but a cluster of fairy castles of smoked pearl, opalescent and mysterious in their shadowy outline!

Eddie's arm tightened around Mary's waist and somehow Mary's head found the hollow in Eddie's shoulder that had been made for it. And right there, somehow, Mary forgot all about going away. Eddie was saying something about not working in the mill all his life; and something about some day building a little house with a green roof for Mary.

But Mary wasn't really listening—there were already fairy castles, over there, in Threedeckerdom.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale

Default having been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage containing a Power of Sale, by reason of which default said Power of Sale has become operative, and the Assignee of the Mortgagee hereinafter named is authorized to declare the whole sum due and he hereby does declare said sum due, which mortgage was executed by Olaus Rodahl and Josie Rodahl, his wife, Mortgagors, to Deposit Trust & Savings Bank, Winona, Minn., a corporation under the laws of the State of Minnesota, Mortgagee, dated October the 25, 1920, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota on the 9th day of November 1920 at 8:30 o'clock A. M., in Book 92 of Mortgages, on page 322.

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Deposit Trust & Savings Bank, Winona, Minn., Mortgagee, to Jacob Kaldunski, by written assignment, dated August 10th, 1921 and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 7th day of February 1925, at 11 o'clock A. M., in Book 110 of Mortgages, on page 355:

And whereas the said Jacob Kaldunski, the assignee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the Power of Sale therein contained; and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of Three Thousands Dollars ($3000.00), with accumulated interest from the 25th day of October 1922 at the rate of six and one-half percent per annum. Less Eighty-seven and 88-100 Dollars ($87.88) paid on December 10th, 1923 for and on account of interest; and whereas the said Power of Sale has become operative and no action or proceedings having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

NOW THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz:

East Half Southwest Quarter (E½ SW¼), East Half Northwest Quarter (E½ NW¼), of Section number Thirty-five (35), in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North of Rrange Forty-two (42) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota.

Which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County at the Front door of the County Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 7th day of April 1925 at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the amount then due on said mortgage and all delinquent taxes, if any, paid on said described premises, together with the costs and disbursements of such sale and Seventy-five Dollars attorneys fees stipulated in said Mortgage in cases of foreclosure.

Dated February 16th, 1925.

JACOB KALDUNSKI,
Assignee of Mortgagee.

MRS. WM. BUTTS WAS VERY SICK

Gives Full Credit to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for Remarkable Recovery

Wellston, O.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to make me strong. I was troubled with my back and sides hurting me till I could not do my work, and whenever I caught cold it made me irregular. Since I have taken the Vegetable Compound my side and back don't bother me and I can do my housework and care for my children now, where before I did not feel like doing anything or going around. After my first child was born about four years ago I saw an advertisement in the paper about the Vegetable Compound. I knew it would help me, but I was afraid to try it because people said it would help you to have children and I knew I was having children fast enough. But I thought if it would help me it would be better to have a whole house full of children and have good health. I became stronger from taking it and my husband says I look like a live woman instead of a dead one. When Spring comes I am going to take your Blood Medicine as I am very thin. I will answer letters from any woman who wishes to ask about your medicine."—Mrs. WILLIAM BUTTS, Wellston, Ohio.

SO BIG

THE NEW LIFE

SYNOPSIS. — Introducing "So Big" (Dirk DeJong) in his infancy. And his mother, Selina DeJong, daughter of Simeon Peake, gambler and gentleman of fortune. Her life, to young womanhood in Chicago in 1888, has been unconventional, somewhat seamy, but generally enjoyable. At school her chum is Julie Hempel, daughter of August Hempel, butcher. Simeon is killed in a quarrel that is not his own, and Selina, nineteen years old and practically destitute, secures a position as teacher at the High Prairie school, in the outskirts of Chicago, living at the home of a truck farmer, Klaas Pool. In Roelf, twelve years old, son of Klaas, Selina perceives a kindred spirit, a lover of beauty, like herself.

Chapter III

—4—

Every morning throughout November it was the same. At six o'clock: "Miss Peake! Oh, Miss Peake!"

"I'm up!" Selina would call in what she meant to be a gay voice, through chattering teeth.

"You better come down and dress where is warm here by the stove."

Peering down the perforations in the floor-hole through which the parlor chimney swelled so proudly into the drum, Selina could vaguely descry Mrs. Pool stationed just below, her gaze upturned.

That first morning, on hearing this invitation, Selina had been rocked between horror and mirth. "I'm not cold, really. I'm almost dressed. I'll be down directly."

Maartje Pool must have sensed some of the shock in the girl's voice; or, perhaps, even some of the laughter. "Pool and Jakob are long out already cutting. Here back of the stove you can dress warm."

Shivering and tempted though she was, Selina had set her will against it. "I won't go down," she said to herself, shaking with the cold. "I won't come down to dressing behind the kitchen stove like a—like a peasant in one of those dreadful Russian novels. . . . That sounds stuck up and horrid. . . . The Pools are good and kind and decent. . . . But I won't come down to huddling behind the stove with a bundle of underwear in my arms. Oh, dear, this corset's like a casing of ice.

"But I won't dress behind the kitchen stove!" declared Selina, glaring meanwhile at that hollow pretense, the drum. She even stuck her tongue out at it (only nineteen, remember!).

When she thought back, years later, on that period of her High Prairie experience, stoves seemed to figure with absurd prominence in her memory. That might well be. A stove changed the whole course of her life.

From the first, the schoolhouse stove was her bete noir. Out of the welter of that first year it stood, huge and menacing, a black tyrant. The High Prairie schoolhouse in which Selina taught was a little more than a mile up the road beyond the Pool farm. She came to know that road in all its moods—ice-locked, drifted with snow, wallowing in mud. School began at half-past eight. After her first week Selina had the mathematics of her early morning reduced to the least common denominator. Up at six. A plunge into the frigid garments; breakfast of bread, cheese, sometimes bacon, always rye coffee without cream or sugar. On with the cloak, muffler, hood, mittens, galoshes. The lunch box in bad weather. Up the road to the schoolhouse, battling the prairie wind that whipped the tears into the eyes, plowing the drifts, slipping on the hard ruts and icy ridges in dry weather. Excellent at nineteen. As she flew down the road in sun or rain, in wind or snow, her mind's eye was fixed on the stove. The schoolhouse reached, her numbed fingers wrestled with the rusty lock. The door opened, there smote her the schoolroom smell—a mingling of dead ashes, kerosene, unwashed bodies, dust, mice, chalk, stove-wood, lunch crumbs, mold, slate that has been washed with saliva. Into this Selina rushed, untying her muffler as she entered. In the little vestibule there was a box piled with chunks of stove-wood and another heaped with dried corn-cobs. Alongside this a can of kerosene. The cobs served as kindling. A dozen or more of these you soaked with kerosene and stuffed into the maw of the rusty iron pot-bellied stove. A match. Up flared the corn-cobs. Now was the moment for a small stick of wood; another to keep it company. Shut the door. Draughts. Dampers. Smoke. Suspense. A blaze, then a crackle. The wood has caught. In with a chunk now. A wait. Another chunk. Slam the door. The schoolhouse fire is started for the day. As the room thawed gradually Selina removed layers of outer garments. By the time the children arrived the room was livable.

Selina had seen herself, dignified, yet gentle, instructing a roomful of Dutch cherubs in the simpler elements of learning. But it is difficult to be dignified and gracious when you are suffering from chilblains. Selina fell victim to this sordid discomfort, as did every child in the room. She sat at the battered pine desk or moved about, a little ice-wool shawl around her shoulders when the wind was wrong and the stove balky. Her white little face seemed whiter in contrast with the black folds of this somber garment. Her slim hands were rough and chapped. The oldest child in the room was thirteen, the youngest four and a half.

Early in the winter Selina had had the unfortunate idea of opening the ice-locked windows at intervals and giving the children five minutes of exercise while the fresh cold air cleared brains and room at once. Arms waved wildly, heads wobbled, short legs worked vigorously. At the end of the week twenty High Prairie parents sent protests by note or word of mouth. Jan and Cornelius, Katrina and Aggie went to school to learn reading and writing and numbers, not to stand with open windows in the winter.

On the Pool farm the winter work had set in. Klaas drove into Chicago with winter vegetables only once a week now. He and Jakob and Roelf were storing potatoes and cabbages underground; repairing fences; preparing frames for the early spring planting; sorting seedlings. It had been Roelf who had taught Selina to build the schoolhouse fire. He had gone with her on that first morning, had started the fire, filled the water pail, initiated her in the rites of corn-cobs, kerosene, and dampers. A shy, dark, silent boy. She set out deliberately to woo him to friendship.

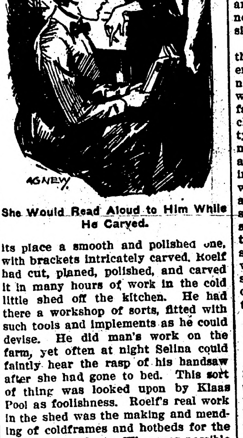
"Roelf, I have a book called 'Ivanhoe.' Would you like to read it?"

"Well, I don't get much time."

"You wouldn't have to hurry. Right there in the house. And there's another called 'The Three Musketeers.'"

He was trying not to appear pleased; to appear stolid and Dutch, like the people from whom he had sprung. Some Dutch sailor ancestor, Selina thought, or fisherman, must have touched at an Italian port or Spanish and brought back a wife whose eyes and skin and feeling for beauty had skipped layer on layer of placid Netherlands to crop out now in this wistful sensitive boy.

Selina had spoken to Pool about a shelf for her books and her photographs. He had put up a rough bit of board, very crude and ugly, but it had served. She had come home one snowy afternoon to find this shelf gone and in its place a smooth and polished one, with brackets intricately carved. Roelf had cut, planed, polished, and carved it in many hours of work in the cold little shed off the kitchen. He had there a workshop of sorts, fitted with such tools and implements as he could devise. He did man's work on the farm, yet often at night Selina could faintly hear the rasp of his handsaw after she had gone to bed. This sort of thing was looked upon by Klaas Pool as foolishness. Roelf's real work in the shed was the making and mending of coldframes and hotbeds for the early spring plants. Whenever possible Roelf neglected this dull work for some fancy of his own. To this Klaas Pool objected as being "dumb."



She Would Read Aloud to Him While He Carved.

"Roelf, stop that foolishness, get your ma once some wood. Carving on that box again instead of finishing them coldframes. Some day, by golly, I show you. I break every stick . . . dumb as a Groningen . . ."

Roelf did not sulk. He seemed not to mind, particularly, but he came back to the carved box as soon as chance presented itself. He was reading her books with such hunger as to cause her to wonder if her stock would last him the winter. Sometimes, after supper, when he was hammering and sawing away in the little shed Selina would snatch Maartje's old shawl off the hook, and swathed in this against draughty chinks, she would read aloud to him while he carved, or talk to him above the noise of his tools. Selina was a gay and volatile person. She loved to make this boy laugh. His dark face would flash into almost dazzling animation. Sometimes Maartje, hearing their young laughter, would come to the shed door and stand there a moment, hugging her arms in her rolled apron and smiling at them, uncomprehending but companionable.

"You make fun, h'm?"

"Come in, Mrs. Pool. Sit down on my box and make fun, too. Here, you may have half the shawl."

"Og Heden! I got no time to sit down." She was off.

Roelf slid his plane slowly, more slowly, over the surface of satin-smooth oak board. He stopped, twined a curl of shaving about his finger. "When I am a man, and earning, I am going to buy my mother a silk dress like I saw in a store in Chicago and she should put it on every day, not only for Sunday; and sit in a chair and make little fine stitches like Widow Paarlenberg."

"What else are you going to do when you grow up?" She waited, certain that he would say something delightful.

"Drive the team to town alone to market."

"Oh, Roelf!"

"Sure. Already I have gone five times—twice with Jakob and three times with Pop. Pretty soon, when I am seventeen or eighteen, I can go alone. At five in the afternoon you start and at nine you are in the Haymarket. There all night you sleep on the wagon. There are gas lights. The men play dice and cards. At four in the morning you are ready when they come, the commission men and the peddlers and the grocery men. Oh, it's fine, I tell you!"

"Roelf!" She was bitterly disappointed.

"Here. Look." He rummaged around in a dusty box in a corner and, suddenly shy again, laid before her a torn sheet of coarse brown paper on which he had sketched crudely, effectively, a melee of great-haunched horses; wagons piled high with garden truck; men in overalls and corduroys; flaring gas torches. He had drawn it with a stub of pencil exactly as it looked to him. The result was as startling as that achieved by the present-day disciple of the impressionistic school.

Selina was enchanted.

Once, early in December, Selina went into town. The trip was born of sudden revolt against her surroundings and a great wave of nostalgia for the dirt and clamor and crowds of Chicago. Early Saturday morning Klaas drove her to the railway station five miles distant. She was to stay until Sunday. A letter had been written Julie Hempel ten days before, but there had been no answer. Once in town she went straight to the Hempel house. Mrs. Hempel, thin-lipped, met her in the hall and said that Julie was out of town. She was visiting her friend Miss Arnold, in Kansas City. Selina was not asked to stay to dinner. She was not asked to sit down. When she left the house her great fine eyes seemed larger and more deep-set than ever, and her jaw-line was set hard against the invasion of tears. Suddenly she hated this Chicago that wanted none of her; that brushed past her, bumping her elbow and offering no apology; that clanged, and shrieked, and whistled, and roared in her ears now grown accustomed to the prairie silence.

She spent the time between one and three buying portable presents for the entire Pool household—including bananas for Geertje and Jozina, for whom that farinaceous fruit had the fascination always held for the farm child. She caught a train at four thirty-five and actually trudged the five miles from the station to the farm, arriving half frozen, weary, with aching arms and nipped toes, to a great welcome of the squeals, grunts, barks, and gutturals that formed the expression of the Pool household. She was astonished to find how happy she was to return to the kitchen stove, to the smell of frying pork, to her own room with the walnut bed and the book shelf. Even the grim drum had taken on the dear and comforting aspect of the accustomed.

Chapter IV

High Prairie swains failed to find Selina alluring. She was too small, too pale and fragile for their robust taste. Naturally, her coming had been an event in this isolated community. With no visible means of communication news of her leaped from farm to farm as flame leaps the gaps in a forest fire. She would have been aghast to learn that High Prairie, inexplicably enough, knew all about her from the color of the ribbon that threaded her neat little white corset covers to the number of books on her shelf. She thought cabbage fields beautiful; she read books to that dumb-acting Roelf Pool; she was making over a dress for Maartje after the pattern of the stylish brown lady's-cloth she wore (foolishly) to school.

On her fifth Sunday in the district she accompanied the Pools to the morning service at the Dutch Reformed church. Maartje seldom had the time for such frivolity. But on this morning Klaas hitched up the big farm wagon with the double seat and took the family complete—Maartje, Selina, Roelf, and the pig-tails. Roelf had rebelled against going, had been cuffed for it, and had sat very still all through the service, gazing at the red and yellow glass church window.

Selina's appearance had made quite a stir, of which she was entirely unaware. As the congregation entered by twos and threes she thought they resembled startlingly a woodcut in an old illustrated book she once had seen. The men's Sunday trousers and coats had a square stiff angularity, as though chopped out of a block. The women, in shawls and bonnets of rusty black, were incredibly cut in the same pattern. The unmarried girls, though, were plump, red-cheeked, and not uncomely, with high round cheek-bones on which sat a spot of brick-red which imparted no glow to the face. Their foreheads were prominent and meaningless.

In the midst of this drab assemblage there entered late and rustlingly a tall, slow-moving woman in a city-bought cloak and a bonnet quite unlike the vintage millinery of High Prairie. An ample woman, with a fine fair skin and a ripe red mouth; a high firm bosom and great thighs that moved rhythmically, slowly. She had thick, insolent eyelids. Her hands, as she turned the leaves of her hymn book, were smooth and white. As she entered there was a little rustle throughout the congregation; a craning of necks.

"Who's that?" whispered Selina to Maartje.

"Widow Paarlenberg. She is rich like anything."

"Yes?" Selina was fascinated.

"Look once how she makes eyes at him."

"At him? Who? Who?"

"Pervus DeJong. By Gerrit Pon he is sitting with the blue shirt and sad looking so."

Selina craned, peered. "The—oh—he's very good looking, isn't he?"

"Sure. Widow Paarlenberg is stuck on him. See how she—Sh-sh-sh!—Reverend Dekker looks at us. I tell you after."

Selina decided she'd come to church oftener. The service went on, dull, heavy. It was in English and Dutch. She heard scarcely a word of it. The Widow Paarlenberg and this Pervus DeJong occupied her thoughts. She decided, without malice, that the widow resembled one of the sleekest of the pink porkers rooting in Klaas Pool's barnyard, waiting to be cut into Christmas meat.

The service ended, there was much talk of the weather, seedlings, stock, the approaching holiday season. Maartje, her Sunday dinner heavy on her mind, was elbowing her way up the aisle. Here and there she introduced Selina briefly to a woman friend. "Mrs. Vander Sijde, meet school teacher."

"Aggie's mother?" Selina would begin, primly, only to be swept along by Maartje on her way to the door. "Mrs. Von Mijnen, meet school teacher. Is Mrs. Von Mijnen." They regarded her with a grim gaze. Selina would smile and nod rather nervously, feeling young, frivolous, and somehow guilty.

When, with Maartje, she reached the church porch Pervus DeJong was unhitching the dejected horse that was harnessed to his battered and lopsided cart. The animal stood with four feet bunched together in a drooping and pathetic attitude and seemed inevitably meant for mating with this decrepit vehicle. DeJong untied the reins quickly, and was about to step into the sagging conveyance when the Widow Paarlenberg sailed down the church steps with admirable speed for one so amply proportioned. She made straight for him, skirts billowing, flounces flying, plumes waving. Maartje clutched Selina's arm. "Look how she makes! She asks him to eat Sunday dinner I bet you! See once how he makes with his head no."

Selina—and the whole congregation unashamedly watching—could indeed see how he made with his head no. His whole body seemed set in negation—the fine head, the broad patient shoulders, the muscular powerful legs in their ill-fitting Sunday blacks. He shook his head, gathered up the reins, and drove away, leaving the Widow Paarlenberg to carry off with such bravado as she could muster this public flouting in full sight of the Dutch Reformed congregation of High Prairie. It must be said that she actually achieved this feat with a rather magnificent composure. Her round, pink face, as she turned away, was placid; her great cowlike eyes mild. She stepped agilely into her own neat phaeton with its sleek horse and was off down the hard snowless road, her head high.

It looks as if Selina were growing rather fond of High Prairie. Likely enough she will fall in love with some truck farmer.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

England's Fish Rain

In August, 1918, a small territory in northern England enjoyed what was possibly the most novel of all showers. The precipitation in large part consisted of fish. The explanation which has been made, and which is seemingly a logical one, is that a waterspout offshore lifted the fish by its power, carried them a short distance inland and with the dispersion of the waterspout and its power dropped the fish on the land.—Science and Invention Magazine.

Traveler's Tale

"Traveled?" said a sailor in a train to a passenger who had questioned him. "I should think I 'ave. I've been all round the world; over an' under it, too. There ain't many ports I don't know the inside of."

"Why, you must know a lot about geography."

"Yes, we did put in there once, but only to coal ship. 'Taint much of a place, what I remember of it."

"Banking" System Old

The Roman emperors lent money upon land. The lending of money on the security of movable articles, which were said to be pledged, became common in European countries during the Fifteenth century. Out of this grew the system known as pawnbroking, which was specially regulated in England in 1756, and 27 years later the business of pawnbroking was licensed.

HEALS RUNNING SORES

"I feel it my duty to write you a letter of thanks for your wonderful Peterson's Ointment. I had a running sore on my left leg for one year. I began to use Peterson's Ointment three weeks ago and now it is healed."—A. C. Gilbrath, 703 Reed St., Erie, Pa.

For years I have been selling through druggists a large box of PETERSON'S OINTMENT for 35 cents. The healing power in this ointment is marvelous. Eczema goes in a few days. Old sores heal up like magic; piles that other remedies do not seem to even relieve are speedily conquered. Pimples and nasty blackheads disappear in a week and the distress of chafing goes in a few minutes. Mail orders filled. Peterson Ointment Co., Inc., Buffalo, N. Y.

Tragedy

The smaller daughter of a certain well-known actor had seen and heard her father rehearsing a new part, and after it was over she retired, greatly impressed, to the nursery. A little later her mother overheard her apparently rehearsing a play she was inventing as she went along.

"My loved one is ill. I must go to him!" There was a momentary pause. Then suddenly: "Blow it, he's dead."

Few Now Have Faith in Legend of St. Swithin

July 15 is observed in England as St. Swithin's day. It is so called because of the legend connected with St. Swithin, bishop of Westminster, and tutor to King Alfred. At his request he was buried in the churchyard of the abbey, where passers-by might tread on his grave, and where the rain from the eaves might fall on it." After his canonization in 865 A. D., it was resolved to remove his remains to the chancel, the customary burial place of the bishops, and July 15 was appointed for the ceremony; but on that day and for forty days thereafter, St. Swithin, to testify to his displeasure, caused rain to fall so heavily that the monks abandoned their design as heretical and blasphemous. From this legend arose the popular superstition in England that if rain falls on July 15 it will continue to do so for the forty days succeeding. Careful records kept at Greenwich observatory for many years, however, show the superstition has no foundation in fact.—Kansas City Star.

Paper Barrels

Winding barrels from a roll of tough "chipboard" paper is accomplished on a machine consisting of a cylinder, cut in two parts, which may be drawn apart on the axle to produce different lengths. The paper, passing through tension rollers and an adhesive device, is wound for a predetermined number of layers, then a slitting wheel divides the paper, the cylinder halves are drawn apart, and an additional thickness of paper wound on in the center to provide the bilge.

More Occupations Gone

One of the hardest things is to know what to say to a person in sorrow, though a similar experience in one's own life helps one to find the right words, and we'd like to know what a petticoat manufacturer and a man who makes switches to match the hair say to each other when they meet.—Ohio State Journal.

Undersea City

Submerged 30 feet below the surface of the Mediterranean sea, off the coast of Tunis, the ruins of an ancient city have been found by divers. They report that many large stone buildings were visible, outlined in dim shadows and sandy bottom, and that fish swarm in and out of crumbled doorways. Scientists are preparing to make further explorations. Additional interest is attached to the discovery, as the city lies in waters described by Virgil and near the "Isle of the Lotus Eaters," of which Homer sang.

Wealth Through Misfortune

At the end of life a man finds himself rich, not so much by his fortunes as by his misfortunes. The Persians had a vase of glass which when empty was colorless, but when filled with wine flashed forth many rare pictures. So a bosom empty of a heart of pain makes a lusterless life, but a bosom in which a heart bleeds reveals hidden virtues.—Tilton.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE INAUGURATED; TAFT ADMINISTERS OATH

Vice President Dawes Also Sworn Into Office—Millions Hear Executive's Address by Radio for First Time in History.

Washington.—President Coolidge was inaugurated with one of the simplest ceremonies of a hundred years. Almost at the same time Vice President Dawes also took the oath of office.

For the first time, not only the thousands who gathered in Washington heard a President deliver his inaugural address, but millions throughout the United States, and probably many elsewhere, heard the address by radio. President Coolidge spoke to probably the greatest audience, seen and unseen, that ever has been addressed by any other man in the history of the world.

With all its studied simplicity and lack of display, which was at the express direction of the President, the ceremony was in marked contrast with the event of nineteen months ago, when, roused from sleep by news of the sudden death of President Harding, Mr. Coolidge took the oath of office administered by his father in the glow of an oil lamp in a Vermont farmhouse.

President Coolidge

The only vice president since Roosevelt to succeed to the office by popular election, President Coolidge renewed his oath before Chief Justice Taft, the only President to take it before a former President.

Ceremony Follows Tradition

The ceremony was the traditional one, and was carried out on a platform built at the east front of the capitol, before the great steps leading to the entrance at the middle of the building, a spot selected in the historic compromise of generations ago when the house and senate each contended that the inauguration should take place within its own precincts.

While congress was winding up its eleventh-hour business, the official congressional committee called at the White House to escort the President to the capitol. This was soon after eleven o'clock.

Pennsylvania avenue, despite the restricted program which cut down the show, was packed as the President, escorted by a troop of cavalry and guarded by secret service men, passed along.

At the capitol he went at once to the President's room, adjoining the senate chamber, and busied himself disposing of acts of congress.

The prelude to the inaugural procession—for the President's journey to the capitol is always the first part of the actual ceremony—was quite different from that of four years ago, for President Coolidge had no outgoing President to accompany him.

Changes of Four Years Recalled

Four years ago Warren Gamaliel Harding, a picture of robust health, so soon to pass away, rode with the pathetic figure of Woodrow Wilson, and, with deprecatory gestures to the crowd, stilled cheers intended for him, out of consideration for the already dying man who rode in the carriage beside him. Little did anyone dream that before another inauguration had rolled around Harding would have preceded Wilson to the great beyond.

While President Coolidge was at work in the President's room at the capitol, Vice President Elect Dawes and his party arrived and took their places in the vice president's room, where they were greeted by Senator Cummins of Iowa, who since Mr. Coolidge became President has presided over the senate. There Mr. Dawes and his party awaited the beginning of the vice presidential inaugural ceremonies in the senate chamber, which preceded by a few minutes the inauguration of President Coolidge in the open air outside.

The senate galleries early had been filled by those fortunate enough to get cards of admission. Many women, scarcely less well known than their husbands in national affairs, shared places with members and families of the diplomatic corps and the official set.

Dawes Takes Oath of Office.

Just as the Sixty-eighth congress died by constitutional limitation at noon, the senate of the Sixty-ninth congress came into being, called in special session to consider executive appointments and, incidentally, to inaugurate the vice president.

A special session of the senate is really not necessary to inaugurate the vice president; he could take the oath of office before a justice of the peace if he chose, and then meet with the senate when it assembles in regular session next winter; but it is the custom.

The diplomatic corps, all invited to the ceremonies, assembled in the marble room which adjoins the chamber, resplendent in their gorgeous full-dress court uniforms. A new doyen headed them this time, Senor Riano, the Spanish ambassador. He took his place as dean with the departure of the former French ambassador, Jules J. Jusserand, who had occupied the place of honor at five previous inaugural ceremonies.

The diplomatic corps entered the chamber according to rank and precedence, fixed in order of the time they have been accredited to the United States, the ambassadors leading the line and the ministers coming after them.

Then came the justices of the Supreme court, headed by Chief Justice Taft, in their somber black silk robes of the bench, and taking chairs placed for them at the right of the incoming vice president.

Senate Chamber Crowded.

After them, members of the house of representatives entered through the main door and took places reserved for them on the west side of the chamber, while the senators gathered at their reserved places on the east.

Sprinkled among them were distinguished officers of the army and navy, a few former members of congress, and, last, persons who have publicly received the thanks of congress and, therefore, are entitled to places on such occasions.

When all the party was assembled, the senate chamber—a comparatively small room which ordinarily seats 96 senators and attaches—contained more than 700 persons on the floor, with many of them necessarily standing.

When all was ready in the chamber, President Coolidge, escorted by the committee on arrangements, was shown into the chamber through the main door, and to a seat on the floor at the right hand side of the center aisle, and facing the rostrum, on which Vice President-elect Dawes was immediately escorted to a seat.

Vice President Dawes

The senate chaplain offered a prayer, and Senator Cummins, as president of the senate, called the assemblage to order.

A silence settled over the company as Senator Cummins and the vice president-elect faced each other. Both raised their right hands. Senator Cummins read the vice president's oath; Mr. Dawes repeated the words as they were spoken, and, as the result of this brief ceremony the country had a vice president for the first time in 19 months.

Inauguration of the President

The assemblage within the senate chamber thereupon began moving in order of precedence to the inaugural stand outside.

A commodious steel canopy had been erected so that President Coolidge could take the oath of office in full view of the waiting thousands, and not be compelled to go through the exercises inside the capitol building, unless the weather was unusually severe.

New Market in St. Louis Have Scales to Aid Buyers

St. Louis.—When St. Louis' new $1,350,000 union market, the second largest in the country, is turned over to public use next June it will have many unusual provisions to safeguard buyers.

One of these will be six scales distributed at various points where buyers may make free use of them to determine whether correct weights have been given. Any discrepancies may be reported to the [illegible] of the marketmaster.

The building is to be of [illegible] concrete with [illegible] brick veneer. Only the first floor will be used as a market place, the three upper floors being reserved for public storage of automobiles, 250 to the floor. The building occupies an entire block, 270 feet long and 19[illegible] feet wide.

There can be no perfect [illegible] except where all are on the same plane morally and intellectually.

"Every Picture Tells a Story"

Feel Achy After Every Cold?

ARE you lame and stiff; tired and nervous—constantly troubled with backache and twinges of pain?

Have you given any attention to your kidneys? Grip, colds and chills, you know, are apt to be mighty hard on the kidneys. And if the overtaxed kidneys fail to properly filter the blood, impurities accumulate and throw the whole system out of tune. Then may follow daily backache, rheumatic pains, headaches, dizziness and annoying kidney irregularities.

In such conditions a good stimulant diuretic should help the kidneys flush the poisons out of your system. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have helped thousands. Are recommended by folks you know. Ask your neighbor!

75% of disease avoided through internal cleanliness

WHEN you are constipated, poisons are formed in the accumulated food waste, and reach all parts of the body. The first results, headaches, biliousness, a feeling of "heaviness", etc., serve as warnings of graver diseases to follow if this intestinal poisoning continues unchecked.

This is why intestinal specialists state that constipation is the primary cause of three-quarters of all illness, including the gravest diseases of life.

Physicians Advise Lubrication for Internal Cleanliness

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste, and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless. Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

OLD BESS SURE LAUGHED LAST

By MARY R. RYAN

(©. 1924, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

OLD EBEN, ruefully nursing his left knee, limped into the Bartlett Corners general store. With a nod to "Dad" Whitecross, proprietor of the store, and an uncivil glance at Joe Larrabee, who had bested Old Eben in their last three checker matches, he carefully deposited himself on his favorite box behind the stove, and stared, with unseeing eyes, at the pile of "dress goods and ladies' wear" on the shelf behind the counter.

The open box of prunes beside him, usually seductive, went unnoticed, for Old Eben, as was evidenced by the open-mouthed amazement of the small circle surveying him, was not himself this evening.

"Dude" Jenkins, who had been the town sport 40 years before, but who had long since abandoned his frivolous ways, broke the silence.

"What's ailin' you, Eben? Gone and got married? I thought I saw you whitewashin' the Widow Anderson's henhouse last week."

Old Eben ceased his contemplation of the dress goods. Flashing, by way of an answer, a withering look at the audacious "Dude," he tenderly lifted his left leg over its mate, and turned a sorrowful countenance in "Dad" Whitecross' direction.

"Old Bess and me had a fallin 'out today," he began. "You know, 'Dad' durin' spring plowin', she's too busy cuttin' furrows and I'm too busy followin' the plow for us to play high jinks considerable, and that's true, likewise, durin' plantin' and harvestin'. It's different, howsomever, when marketin's over, and all that's left to do is the milkin' and other chores.

"That's why I hitched Old Bess in the carriage today for a trot over to Cummins' Crossroads.

"Bein' as this was our first chance at sportin' since last spring, I'd spruced up a bit and had given Bess a slickin' up all over. So we started down the valley road in good spirits, Old Bess never slackenin' speed until we pulled up in front of Homer Walton's grain store at the Crossroads.

"Hitchin' her to the post, I was givin' Bess a few apples as a sort of appetizer for her oats, when I noticed Sid Perkins' boy comin' along Main street with an armful of groceries that his maw had sent him to the store for. When he came to where Bess and me were passin' the time of day, he stumbled and his packages went kerplunk all over the sidewalk in front of Homer's store.

"I put the apples back in my pockets and was helping the boy pick up the groceries when I noticed what was in one of the packages."

Old Eben paused. He did not appear to notice that the checker players had abandoned their game. He had no eyes for the fact that Sim Adams had forgotten to whittle. After tenderly testing the joints of his left leg, followed by a prodigious sigh, he resumed his narrative.

"It was Cheyenne pepper, 'Dad.' And right there I made a mistake, though old Nick must had a finger in it for sure. Feelin' kind of skittish, I thought it would be a right smart joke on Bess if I put some of the pepper in one of the apples and feed it to her.

"After cuttin' a deep hole near the stem I jammed in about half a spoonful, gave her the apple and stood back waitin' for somethin' to happen.

"It didn't take long for Old Bess to find that pepper. She gave me a quick look of surprise and started to cough and sneeze, while the Adams boy and me leaned on the hitchin' rail and laffed fit to bust.

"With my sides achin' from the laffin' I fetched her some water, but Bess acted mighty suspicious before she would take any, and she sniffed, careful-like before eatin' her oats.

"Toward sundown I came back to where Bess was hitched, but not likin' the way she looked at me, I didn't stop to fraternize any, but climbed into the carriage and started home.

"We'd just passed Larkin's bridge and was comin' into the valley road when Old Bess opened up with a burst of speed like she showed nine years ago when she won the county cup.

"I tried to hold her in, but she remembered the pepper and pulled away into a gallop that cut my hands and like to have shook me to pieces.

"You know that hole in the road alongside Perkins' pasthre? Well, 'Dad,' Old Bess knows that hole, too, and in 10 years she has always gone around it—that is, until today."

Old Eben's audience drew closer. The ticking of 'Dad's' old clock up above the cider barrel was the only sound heard as the narrator paused before revealing the climax of his strange recital.

"When I had picked myself out of the burdock bushes and had walked the last mile to home, Old Bess was standin' at the gate, and I'll take my oath that she had a twinkle in her eye when I went up to ask her pardon."

"Those are the words."

Marshall county will pay only $178,087.00 of motor vehicle taxes into the state trunk highway fund toward paying off at maturity the outstanding highway reimbursement bonds, of which $218,975 were issued by and expended in this county.

Under the same laws, Hennepin, Itasca, Ramsey and St. Louis counties issued an average of $2,967,149 but will pay in an average of $3,576,070 each in motor vehicle taxes toward the total for redeeming the bonds. A general tax levy for the purpose would compel the same four counties to pay an average of $3,867,565, or an extra $291,495 each.

THAT RING WAS WORTH ITS COST

By DOROTHY BROMLEY

(©. 1924, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

BILL'S landlady was calling him from his room. "Telephone, Mr. Hooper."

"This is Alice, Bill," came the voice from the receiver. "Can you come over for a moment right away on a matter of business?" The last few words were emphasized.

"Sure," said Bill. "But what's up?"

"I—I can't tell you now, but will you come?"

"Sure!"

The janitor was just lighting the lamp in the vestibule of the apartment house as Bill entered. Alice opened the door of her apartment before he had a chance to ring.

"Bill," she said, "I have just had a telegram that—that my father is sick, and I must go home tonight. But—well, to come to the point—I haven't the money to buy the railroad ticket, and my account at the bank wouldn't stand a check until after I deposit a check I received today, which is too large to cash anywhere else. Bill, can you lend me $10 to go home on, and keep this as security until I return?"

"Sure thing," returned Bill, reaching into his pocket. "I can give you the money, all right, but I don't want the ring. I'd lose it."

"But, Bill, I won't take the money unless you take the ring. I don't want a loan on faith. Please, Bill, take the ring, because I must make that train. And I will redeem it as soon as I can get to a bank with the check I have."

The ring was forced into his hand and Bill gave her the money.

A moment later Bill found himself, rather mystified, walking home along the brilliantly lighted street, the ring still clutched in his hand. It was too small for him to wear, and he feared that if he kept it in his pocket or in his room it might be lost. A solution to this problem came suddenly, when, passing the shop of a pawnbroker, Bill realized that he could leave the ring there and be sure of getting it back when Alice returned from home. He went in.

The man back of the counter examined the jewel. "How much do you want? Twenty-five dollars?"

Bill reasoned he'd only spend the extra money. "No," he said. "Give me ten."

Bill left the shop, examining the pawn ticket in his hand, and started across the street to a cigar store.

Ten seconds later traffic in the street was tied up, and a street car motorman was lifting Bill's inert form into an automobile, which whisked away to the nearest hospital.

* * * * * * *

Alice's father's illness kept her home much longer than she had expected to be kept. She addressed a letter to Bill, enclosing a check for the $10 and requesting a return of the ring, but Bill's former landlady, thoughtlessly, returned the letter to Alice unopened, there being stamped on the return envelope the information that the one addressed was unknown.

* * * * * * *

When Bill, much changed from the results of his accident, was released from the hospital, the swift seasons had traversed half way round the calendar. At first Bill had been unable to write, due to an injury to his arm, but when that member had improved sufficiently he had decided to wait until he could call personally upon Alice to tell her of the loss of the pawn ticket and to explain that he would make an effort to recover the ring as soon as it had spent its legal time in the pawn shop.

After re-establishing himself in his old job, his old room, and his old habitat in general, Bill made bold to visit the pawnbroker. "Yes, I know," the man told him, much to Bill's astonishment. "That ticket was returned by a young lady. I wouldn't cheat you. I'll give you the ring for $10 and interest."

So Bill received back the ring. His next move was to call Alice's old telephone number, and he was surprised again when she answered it.

"Alice," he told her, "this is Bill, Remember?"

"I should say I do," she replied.

"May I see you right away on a matter of business?" he asked, trying to give the words the same inflection that she had given them the night of the accident.

"Why, yes, Bill, come right up." And Bill lost no time about it. It even began to look, he told himself, as though he might get his old girl back.

They spent the first 10 minutes explaining all that had happened.

"I know how the pawnbroker got the ticket," said Alice. "A girl friend of mine picked up the ticket in front of the shop just after I went home, and went in from curiosity to see what had been pawned. The ring looked so much like mine she told me about it and I went to see it. But the man wouldn't give it to us because he said it had been left by a man, and he didn't think it was ours. I had about given it up. I couldn't imagine what had become of you."

"Well," said Bill, "you'd better let me give you back the ring."

"All right," said Alice, "and let me return your $10." She extended her right hand for Bill to return the ring.

"Alice, I—I—," he stammered, "I'd like to buy you a ring like this, but—doctor's bills are expensive and I can't, right now. But I'd like to put this one on your other hand."

"Bill," she cooed, "only on one condition—that you use the $10 to pay the minister."

Holt School Basketeers Lose To St. Hiliare

The basketball team of the Holt public school journeyed down to St. Hiliare on Wednesday evening of last week and was defeated by the High School team of that village in the hardest fought game of the season. The game ended with a score of 31 and 7. This one-sided score is justified when one considers that the Holt team was made up partly of grade students, and that the team as a whole was much lighter and smaller than the St. Hiliare five. The fight displayed by the locals, however, is a credit to their ancestry and shows well what might happen if Coach Arthur Hudson developed a high-school team. If Mr. Hudson gets more of the same kind of material as he got this year, we may expect him to pilot a winner. This season is just the beginning for Holt. Just watch our smoke!

HOLT MEN'S QUINT MEETS FIRST DEFEAT OF SEASON

The Holt Men's Basketball Team suffered their first defeat of the season last Friday night at Roseau, when they played the fast Roseau team. The final score was 26 and 22. Some of the Holt team were under the impression that they were playing the Roseau six. The referee was a Roseau man.

With Roseau out of the way, Halma remains as the most dangerous team between Holt and the district championship. Halma claims the championship over all the teams on the Soo line north of Thief River Falls. Can we beat them?

We should smile.

SO BIG

By EDNA FERBER

(©. Doubleday, Page & Co.) WNU Service.

PERVUS DE JONG

SYNOPSIS.—Introducing "So Big" (Dirk DeJong) in his infancy. And his mother, Selina DeJong, daughter of Simeon Peake, gambler and gentleman of fortune. Her life, to young womanhood in Chicago in 1888, has been unconventional, somewhat seamy, but generally enjoyable. At school her chum is Julie Hempel, daughter of August Hempel, butcher. Simeon is killed in a quarrel that is not his own, and Selina, nineteen years old and practically destitute, secures a position as teacher at the High Prairie school, in the outskirts of Chicago, living at the home of a truck farmer, Klaas Pool. In Roelf, twelve years old, son of Klaas, Selina perceives a kindred spirit, a lover of beauty, like herself. Selina hears gossip concerning the affection of the "Widow Paarlenberg," rich and good-looking, for Pervus DeJong, poor truck farmer, who is insensible to the widow's attractions.

"Well!" exclaimed Selina, feeling as though she had witnessed the first act of an exciting play. And breathed deeply. So, too, did the watching congregation, so that the widow could be said to have driven off in quite a gust.

As they jogged home in the Pool farm wagon Maartje told her tale with a good deal of savor.

Pervus DeJong had been left a widower two years before. Within a month of that time Leendert Paarlenberg had died, leaving to his widow the richest and most profitable farm in the whole community. Pervus DeJong, on the contrary, through inheritance from his father, old Johannes, possessed a scant twenty-five acres of the worst lowland—practically the only lowland—in all High Prairie. The acreage was notoriously barren. Pervus DeJong patiently planted, sowed, gathered crops, hauled them to market; seemed still never to get on in this thrifty Dutch community where getting on was so common a trait as to be no longer thought a virtue. Luck and nature seemed to work against him. His seedlings proved unfertile; his stock was always ailing; his cabbages were worm-infested; snout-beetle bored his rhubarb. When he planted largely of spinach, hoping for a wet spring, the season was dry. Did he turn the following year to sweet potatoes, all auguries pointing to a dry spring and summer, the summer proved the wettest in a decade. Had he been small, puny and insignificant his bad luck would have called forth contemptuous pity. But there was about him the lovableness and splendor of the stricken giant.

It was on this Pervus DeJong, then, that the Widow Paarlenberg of the rich acres, the comfortable farmhouse, the gold neck chain, the silk gowns, the soft white hands and the cooking talents, had set her affections. She wooed him openly, notoriously, and with a Dutch vehemence that would have swept another man off his feet. It was known that she sent him a weekly baking of cakes, pies and bread. She tricked, cajoled, or nagged him into eating her ample meals. She even asked his advice—that subtlest form of flattery. She asked him about sub-soiling, humus, rotation—she whose rich land yielded, under her shrewd management, more profitably to the single acre than to any ten of Pervus'.

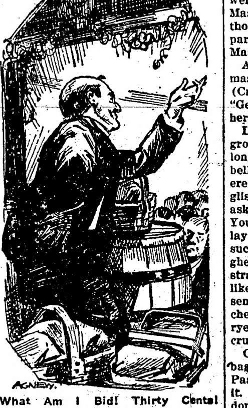
Feeling that the entire community was urging him toward this profitable match with the plump, rich, red-lipped widow, Pervus set his will like a stubborn steer and would have none of her. He was uncomfortable in his untidy house; he was lonely, he was unhappy. But he would have none of her. Vanity, pride, resentment were all mixed up in it.

The very first time that Pervus DeJong met Selina he had a chance to protect her. With such a start, the end was inevitable. Then, too, Selina had on the wine-colored cashmere and was trying hard to keep the tears back in full view of the whole of High Prairie. Urged by Maartje (and rather fancying the idea) Selina had attended the great meeting and dance at Adam Ooms' hall above the general store near the High Prairie station. Farmer families for miles around were there. The new church organ—that time-hallowed pretext for sociability—was the excuse for this gathering. There was a small admission charge. Adam Ooms had given them the hall. The three musicians were playing without fee. The women were to bring supper packed in boxes or baskets, these to be raffled off to the highest bidder whose privilege it then was to sup with the fair whose basket he had bought. Hot coffee could be had at so much the cup. All the proceeds were to be devoted to the organ. Maartje had packed her own basket at noon and had driven off at four with Klaas and the children. She was to serve on one of those bustling committees whose duties ranged from coffee making to dish washing. Klaas and Roelf were to be pressed into service. Jakob Hoogendunk would convey Selina to the festivities when his chores were done. Selina's lunch basket was to be a separate and distinct affair, offered at auction with those of the Katrinas and Linas and Sophias of High Prairie. Not a little apprehensive, she was to pack this basket herself. Maartje, departing, had left copious but disjointed instructions.

Maartje's own basket was of gigantic proportions and staggering content. Her sandwiches were cubic blocks; her pickles clubs of cucumber; her pies vast plateaus.

The basket provided for Selina, while not quite so large, still was of appalling size as Selina contemplated it. She decided, suddenly, that she would have none of it. In her trunk she had a cardboard box such as shoes come in. Certainly this should hold enough lunch for two, she thought. She was a little nervous about the whole thing; rather dreaded the prospect of eating her supper with a High Prairie swain unknown to her. Suppose no one should bid for her box! She resolved to fill it after her own pattern, disregarding Maartje's heavy provender.

She had the kitchen to herself. Jakob was in the fields or out-houses. The house was deliciously quiet. Selina rummaged for the shoe box, lined it with a sheet of tissue paper, rolled up her sleeves, got out mixing bowl, flour, pans. Cup cakes were her ambition. She baked six of them. They came out a beautiful brown but somewhat leaden. Still, anything was better than a wedge of soggy pie, she told herself. She boiled eggs very hard, halved them, devilled their yolks, filled the whites neatly with this mixture and clapped the halves together again, skewering them with a toothpick. Then she rolled each egg separately in tissue paper twisted at the ends. Daintiness, she had decided, should be the keynote of her supper box. The food neatly packed she wrapped the box in paper and tied it with a gay red ribbon yielded by her trunk. At the last moment she whipped into the yard, twisted a brush of evergreen from the tree at the side of the house, and tucked this into the knot of ribbon atop the box. She stepped back and thought the effect enchanting.



"What Am I Bid! Thirty Cents! Shame on You, Gentlemen!"

She was waiting in her red cashmere and her cloak and hood when Hoogendunk called for her. They were late arrivals.

Selina, balancing her box carefully, opened the door that led to the wooden stairway. The hall was on the second floor. The clamor that struck her ears had the effect of a physical blow. She hesitated a moment, and if there had been any means of returning to the Pool farm, short of walking five miles in the snow, she would have taken it. Up the stairs and into the din. Evidently the auctioning of supper baskets was even now in progress. The auctioneer was Adam Ooms who himself had once been the High Prairie school teacher. A fox-faced little man, bald, falsetto, the village clown with a solid foundation of shrewdness under his clowning and a tart layer of malice over it.

High and shrill came his voice. "What am I bid! What am I bid! Thirty cents! Thirty-five! Shame on you, gentlemen. What am I bid! Who'll make it forty!"

Selina felt a little thrill of excitement. She looked about for a place on which to lay her wraps, espied a box that appeared empty, rolled her cloak, muffler, and hood into a neat bundle and, about to cast it into the box, saw, upturned to her from its depths the round pink faces of the sleeping Kuyper twins, aged six months. Oh, dear! In desperation Selina placed her bundle on the floor in a corner, smoothed down the red cashmere, snatched up her lunch box and made for the doorway with the childish eagerness of one out of the crowd to be in it. She wondered where Maartje and Klaas Pool were in this close-packed roomful, and Roelf. In the doorway she found that broad black-coated backs shut off sight and ingress. She had written her name neatly on her lunch box. Now she was at a loss to find a way to reach Adam Ooms. She eyed the great-shouldered expanse just ahead of her. In desperation she decided to dig into it with a corner of her box. She dug, viciously. The back winced. Its owner turned. "Here! What—"

Selina looked up into the wrathful face of Pervus DeJong. Pervus DeJong looked down into the startled eyes of Selina Peake. Large enough eyes at any time; enormous now in her fright at what she had done.

"I'm sorry! I'm—sorry. I thought if I could—there's no way of getting my lunch box up there—such a crowd—"

A slim, appealing, lovely little figure in the wine-red cashmere, amidst all those buxom bosoms, and over-heated bodies, and flushed faces. His gaze left her reluctantly, settled on the lunch box, became, if possible, more bewildered. "That? Lunch box?"

"Yes. For the raffle. I'm the school teacher. Selina Peake."

He nodded. "I saw you in church Sunday."

"You did! I didn't think you. . . . Did you?"

"Wait here. I'll come back. Wait here."

He took the shoe box. She waited. He plowed his way through the crowd like a Juggernaut, reached Adam Ooms' platform and placed the box inconspicuously next a colossal hamper that was one of a dozen grouped awaiting Adam's attention. When he had made his way back to Selina he again said, "Wait," and plunged down the wooden stairway. Selina waited. She had ceased to feel distressed at her inability to find the Pools in the crowd, a-tiptoe though she was. When presently he came back he had in his hand an empty wooden soap box. This he up-ended in the doorway just behind the crowd stationed there. Selina mounted it; found her head a little above the level of his. She could survey the room from end to end. There were the Pools. She waved to Maartje; smiled at Roelf. He made as though to come toward her; did come part way, and was restrained by Maartje catching at his coat tail.

Adam Ooms' gavel (a wooden potato masher) crashed for silence. "Ladies!" (Crash) "And gents!" (Crash)! "Gents! Look what basket we've got here!"

Look indeed. A great hamper, grown so plethoric that it could no longer wear its cover. Its contents bellied into a mound smoothly covered with a fine white cloth whose glistening surface proclaimed it damask. A Himalaya among hampers. You knew that under that snowy crust lay gold that was fowl done crisply, succulently; emeralds in the form of gherkins; rubies that melted into strawberry preserves; cakes frosted like diamonds; to say nothing of such semi-precious jewels as potato salad; cheeses; sour cream to be spread on rye bread and butter; coffee cakes; crullers.

Crash! "The Widow Paarlenberg's basket, ladies—and gents; The Widow Paarlenberg! I don't know what's in it. You don't know what's in it. We don't have to know what's in it. Who has eaten Widow Paarlenberg's chicken once don't have to know. Who has eaten Widow Paarlenberg's cake once don't have to know. What am I bid on Widow Paarlenberg's basket! What am I bid! WhatmIbidwhatmIbidwhatmIbid!" (Crash)!

The widow herself, very handsome in black silk, her gold neck chain rising and falling richly with the little flurry that now agitated her broad bosom, was seated in a chair against the wall not five feet from the auctioneer's stand. She bridled now, blushed, cast down her eyes, cast up her eyes, succeeded in looking as unconscious as a complaisant Turkish slave girl on the block.

Adam Ooms' glance swept the hall until it reached the tall figure towering in the doorway—reached it, and rested there. His gimlet eyes seemed to bore their way into Pervus DeJong's steady stare. He raised his right arm aloft, brandishing the potato masher. The whole room fixed its gaze on the blond head in the doorway. "Speak up! Young men of High Prairie! Heh, you, Pervus DeJong! WhatmIbidwhatmIbidwhatmIbid!"

"Fifty cents!" The bid came from Gerrit Pon at the other end of the hall. A dashing offer, as a start, in this district where one dollar often represented the profits on a whole load of market truck brought to the city.

Crash! went the potato masher. "Fifty cents I'm bid. Who'll make it seventy-five? Who'll make it seventy-five?"

"Sixty!" Johannes Ambuul, a widower, his age more than the sum of his bid.

"Seventy!" Gerrit Pon.

Adam Ooms whispered it—hissed it. "S-s-s-seventy. Ladies and gents, I wouldn't repeat out loud sucha figger. I would be ashamed. Look at this basket, gents, and then you can say . . . s-s-seventy!"

"Seventy-five!" the cautious Ambuul.

Scarlet, flooding her face, belied the widow's outward air of composure. Pervus DeJong, standing beside Selina, viewed the proceedings with an air of detachment. High Prairie was looking at him expectantly, openly. The widow bit her red lip, tossed her head. Pervus DeJong returned the auctioneer's meaning smirk with the mild gaze of a disinterested outsider.

"Gents!" Adam Ooms' voice took on a tearful note—the tone of one who is more hurt than angry. "Gents!" Slowly, with infinite reverence, he lifted one corner of the damask cloth that concealed the hamper's contents—lifted it and peered within as at a treasure. At what he saw there he started back dramatically, at once rapturous, despairing, amazed. He rolled his eyes. He smacked his lips. He rubbed his stomach. The sort of dumb show that, since the days of the Greek drama, has been used to denote gastronomic delight.

"Eighty!" was wrenched suddenly from Goris Von Vauren, the nineteen-year-old, fat and gluttonous son of a prosperous New Haarlem farmer.

Adam Ooms rubbed brisk palms together. "Now then! A dollar! A dollar! It's an insult to this basket to make it less than a dollar." He leaned far forward over his improvised pulpit. "Did I hear you say a dollar, Pervus DeJong?" DeJong stared, immovable, unabashed. "Eighty-eighty-eighty-eighty—gents! I'm going to tell you something. I'm going to whisper a secret." His lean face was veined with craftiness. "Gents. Listen. It isn't chicken in this beautiful basket. It isn't chicken. It's"—a dramatic pause—"it's roast duck!" He swayed back, mopped his brow with his red handkerchief, held one hand high in the air. His last card.

"Eighty-five!" groaned the fat Goris Von Vuuren.

"Eighty-five! Eighty-five! Eightyfiveeightyfiveeightyfive eighty-five! Gents! Gen-tle-men! Eighty-five once! Eighty-five—twice!" (Crash)! "Gone to Goris Von Vuuren for eighty-five."

A sigh went up from the assemblage; a sigh that was the wind before the storm. There followed a tornado of talk. It crackled and thundered. The rich Widow Paarlenberg would have to eat her supper with Von Vuuren's boy, the great thick Goris. And there in the doorway, talking to teacher as if they had known each other for years, was Pervus DeJong with his money in his pocket. It was as good as a play.

Adam Ooms was angry. His lean, fox-like face became pinched with spite. He prided himself on his antics as auctioneer; and his chef d'oeuvre had brought a meager eighty-five cents, besides doubtless winning him the enmity of that profitable store customer, the Widow Paarlenberg. Goris Von Vuuren came forward to claim his prize amidst shouting, clapping, laughter. The great hamper was handed down to him.

Adam Ooms scuffled about among the many baskets at his feet. His nostrils looked pinched and his skinny hands shook a little as he searched for one small object.

When he stood upright once more he was smiling. His little eyes gleamed. His wooden scepter pounded for silence. High in one hand, balanced daintily on his finger tips, he held Selina's little white shoe box, with its red ribbon binding it, and the plume of evergreen stuck in the ribbon. Affecting great solicitude he brought it down then to read the name written on it; held it aloft again, smirking.

He said nothing. Grinning, he held it high. He turned his body at the waist from side to side, so that all might see. The eyes of those before him still held a mental picture of the huge hamper, food-packed, that had just been handed down. The contrast was too absurd, too cruel. A ripple of laughter swept the room; rose; swelled to a roar. Adam Ooms waited with a nice sense of the dramatic until the laughter had reached its height, then held up a hand for silence. A great scraping "Ahem!" as he cleared his throat threatened to send the crowd off again.

"Ladies—and gents! Here's a dainty little tidbit. Here's something not only for the inner man, but a feast for the eye. Well, boys, if the last lot was too much for you this lot ought to be just about right. If the food ain't quite enough for you, you can tie the ribbon in the lady's hair and put the posy in your bottonhole and there you are. There you are! What's more, the lady herself goes with it. You don't get a country girl with this here box, gents. A city girl, you can tell by looking at it, just. And who is she? Who did up this dainty little box just big enough for two?" He inspected it again, solemnly, and added, as an afterthought, "If you ain't feeling specially hungry. Who?—" He looked about, apishly.

Who buys Selina's dainty little luncheon box? And what is to be the result?

A Concession

"A young woman of our family returning home from a trip brought a gift for each of her mother's servants," writes a contributor. "For the laundress she had a silk blouse of a bright shade. 'That won't do for Hannah,' her mother said; 'her husband died and she is in mourning.'

"Later in the day she showed Hannah the present she had intended for her and said she was sorry for the mistake, adding: 'I will give the blouse to Lizzie and get you something else.'

"Hannah looked admiringly at the pretty garment and then said: 'Don't you give that blouse to no Lizzie, Miss Annabelle, 'cause next month I'se gwine outa mournin' from de waist up.'"—Boston Transcript.

"Did Milton Visit Heaven?"

Certain facetious critics are poking fun at Eli Siegel of Baltimore, the reported winner of the annual poetry prize offered by the Nation. The ground of the criticism is simple. Mr. Siegel's poem is called "Hot Afternoons I Have Seen in Montana," and he confesses he has never been in Montana. The critics find this humorous. Mr. Siegel's reply should be simple. He should point out that two previous poets—John Milton and Dante—wrote poems on heaven and hell long before either of them had ever seen either place.—Baltimore Sun.

Canal Makes Record

Traffic through the Welland canal during the season of 1924 was the heaviest of any year in the history of that waterway. From its opening last year on April 16 to its close on December 13, the freight carried through the canal amounted to 5,037,412 tons, which was more than 1,280,000 tons ahead of the previous year and 1,750,000 tons ahead of the previous high record made in 1914.

Health and good looks
—the reward of internal cleanliness.

IF YOU do not keep clean internally your looks and health are undermined together. A clogged intestine breeds poisons that reach every part of the body. These poisons ruin the complexion and undermine health. Constipation brings on such ailments as headaches, bilious attacks and insomnia, each of which saps your health and vitality.

Avoid Laxatives—say Doctors

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition.

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

ROADS UPKEEP HIT IF MEASURE FAILS

Entire Program of New Construction and Part of Maintenance Periled by Program Foes.

St. Paul—The Minnesota highway department would be forced to adopt a policy of abandoning all new construction and permit some of the improved roads on the 7,000 mile trunk highway system to deteriorate if the legislature fails to adopt the refinancing program, if the proposed gasoline tax is attacked in the courts and if only slight reduction is made in the motor vehicle tax schedule, according to figures compiled by C. M. Babcock state highway commissioner.

These figures show that the entire structure of improved highways is in jeopardy through proposals of some legislators who are fighting the refinancing program. These legislators propose to:

Reject the refinancing plan which would refund $22,150,000 of the $33,600,000 county reimbursement bonds.

Enact a 2 cent gasoline tax, which, however, probably would be attacked in the courts and, if the history of other states is repeated in Minnesota, the funds available would be tied up for two years.

Reduce the motor vehicle tax schedule on the ground that automobile owners in the state expected such a reduction when they voted for the gasoline tax amendment.

State of Minnesota will suffer substantial losses in its $40,000,000 rural credits loan experiment, carried on in the last two years, and some of the losses grew out of "incompetency and lack of judgment" by some of the appraisers, a joint legislative committee, which has conducted an investigation, reported to the legislature.

The rural credits bureau it criticized for the manner in which it permitted inflated valuation to be made by appraisers.

The committee specifically avoided any recommendation regarding the future policy of the state in the farm loan business "believing it to be outside the scope of its investigations and perview."

The report said that records furnished from the bureau showed that on February 1 the state's investment in the lands where foreclosures have been completed and where the state has acquired title to the land, subject to the right to redeem, is in excess of $100,000. There are 235 delinquent loans amounting to $1,143,000, on which foreclosure has not yet been commenced and the committee pointed to these as another probable source of loss although any estimate of aggregate loss was held to be "merest conjecture."

Riders Attacked.

"While the committee feels that the state will suffer losses, it cannot say that such losses are greater or more numerous than could be expected under the circumstances in the handling of the emergency measure of $40,000,000," the report read.

The committee report, which was prepared by Senator Chris Rosenmeier, was signed by Senatros C. A. Lund, W. A. Just and Rosenmeier; and Representatives R. A. Wilkinson, Henry Spindler and Marius Waldel, the six members of the joint investigating committee.

Governor to Appoint Senator.

Minnesota's law defining a method of filling a vacancy in the office of United States senator, which has been on the statute books for 12 years, is about to be superseded by a new law which will remove all doubt about whether the governor actually has the authority to make an interim appointment in an emergency. The senate unanimously passed the new senatorial succession bill. The house already has passed it and now it goes to Governor Christianson for his signature. When the bill formally becomes a law it will put an end to a curious legal tangle over which there has existed considerable difference of opinion.

Would Cut Auto Tax.

Class A automobiles, which includes all cars weighing less than 2,000 pounds will pay a minimum license fee of $10 under a bill which is to be introduced as committee bill by the motor vehicle committee of the house.

Cars now paying a minimum of $15 will pay $12.50, the committee decided at a special meeting. Licenses on all other cars will be reduced 16 2-3 per cent, or 1-6th of the present scale, under the bill.

Deadline on Bills.

March 28 is the last day for the introduction of bills in the legislature, according to Attorney General Clifford L. Hilton. April 21 is the last day for the passing of bills and the session will terminate April 22.

Senate Child Labor Fight Seen

With only one dissenting vote the public welfare committee of the senate indefinitely postponed the joint resolution passed by the house two weeks ago which calls for rejecting the proposed child labor amendment to the federal constitution.

But that one dissenting vote, cast by Senator J. E. Madigan of Maple Lake, assures a senate fight upon the moot question Senator Madigan, opponent of the amendment, gave notice that he will submit a minority report with the committee's majority report.

House Slashes Senate Bill.

A clash between the senate and house over the question of just how far the economy program is to go seemed certain following a cut of more than a million dollars in the senate omnibus appropriation bill for state institutions by the house. Senator A. J. Rockne, chairman of the senate finance committee, which drew the bill, says he will not agree to the reduction.

The total amount allowed by the house was $6,703,200.

The total amount allowed by the senate when it passed the bill some time ago was $7,819,950.

The board of control originally asked for $8,098,400, or about $500,000 less than was allowed in 1923.

Labor Agency Bill Up.

Organized labor of Minneapolis startde a campaign in opposition to a bill pending before the legislature providing for the increase of the number of products manufactured by inmates of state institutions.

The Morin-Dwyer employment agency regulation bill has gone to general orders in the senate without recommendation, following resumption of the 10-year-old fight over agency regulation before the senate labor committee.

The bill provides for the licensing, bonding and limitation of fees of the agencies, places them under the jurisdiction of the state industrial commission and gives their body authority to make rules and regulations for their guidance.

Bill Would Speed Up Law.

Another move to speed up litigation in Minnesota courts, establishment of the declaratory judgments system of legal decisions which would determine the rights of parties before the necessity of hostile acts to bring cases into court, got under way at the legislature. The Minnesota State Bar Association is working for passage of a bill which would enable such judgments.

Donald E. Bridgeman, chairman of the committee on uniform state laws of the bar association, appeared before legislative committees to urge passage of the declaratory judgments bill. Statements of indorsement have been obtained from Judge Horace D. Dickinson, presiding judge of the fourth judicial district, Dean Everett Fraser, of the University of Minnesota law school, and Royal A. Stone, chief justice of the Minnesota Supreme Court.

"This sort of action should in the long run actually reduce the time required of the courts to settle disputes, as short trials to determine rights will tend to replace long trials to determine wrongs," Judge Dickinson said.

Eleven states already have adopted in their courts the declaratory judgment system.

Would Provide Governor Home.

An executive mansion for the governor of Minnesota is proposed in a bill, which is before the house appropriations committee. The bill proposes to acquire title to the old John Merriam home, a stone structure at University avenue and Capital boulevard, directly back of the state capitol. The bill was introduced in the lower branch of the legislature by Representative Guy E. Dilley, of St. Paul, supported by the Ramsey county delegation and a number of representatives from other counties. The proposal is to create a commission, composed of the governor, auditor and attorney general, to determine methods of purchasing the property by the state to be used as the governor's residence. Purchase could be made out of money available. The measure does not call for an appropriation.

MINNESOTA BRIEFS

Sauk Centre—Irving Korf, a 12 year old boy residing in district 61, Getty township south of here, has not missed a day of school in six years. He has kept his record clear in spite of a broken arm suffered recently.

Mrs. Obert Reierson and little daughter returned home last week Thursday from visiting her folks east of Strathcona.

T. B. Folden has received word from his wife that she has arrived safely at Fort Harrison, Mont., and found their son Hilmer very low.

Miss Amanda Mickelson was a patient in the Thief River Falls hospital a few days the past week, but was somewhat better at last reports.

Peter Hanson was to Greenbush last Sunday and brot back his two children, Harriet and Omar. Mr. S. T. Hagen, Mrs. Hanson's father, accompanied him and visited here until Tuesday evening, when he returned to Greenbush.

The experiment station at Crookston says that careful tests show hulless oats cannot be recommended to take the place of oats with the hulls on. They also say seed corn is poor this year and they will furnish names of dealers who have good seed corn for sale.

Mr. Austinson, an elderly farmer living near Steiner, died Tuesday evening from injuries received in a runaway accident the same afternoon. It has been hare to get the facts in the case, and is reported that his team was scared by an auto and ran away with the above results.

On and after April 15 no money orders will be issued for less than five cents, insured mail fees will be five cents and up, registered letters will be fifteen and twenty cents, special deliveries of letters and parcels will be fifteen and twenty cents, C. O. D. fees will be twelve to twenty five cents and there will be a service fee of two cents on parcel post packages.

Prof. and Mrs. Geo. J. Smith have resigned their positions in the Holt school to take effect the forepart of June.

Arthur Hudson who is at present assistant principal, has been elected principal for the coming year at a salary of $1550.00. Miss Eldridge has been re-elected to her present position in the school.

A pleasant time was spent at the Young home last Saturday evening when a number of friends helped H. B. celebrate his 53rd birthday at a turkey supper, with all the accessories. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Lund and baby, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Carlson and Clarence Erickson. Mr. and Mrs. Sam Reierson were unable to be present on account of sickness of the children. The evening was spent in music, conversation and the Flinch game, seasoned with laughter. At the conclusion of the game, ice-cream, cake and coffee were served. May a repetition of the pleasant evening be experienced, for many years to come!—Cor.

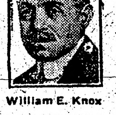
Save on Your Gas and See the Scenery!

By WILLIAM E. KNOX
President American Bankers Association.



William E. Knox

A long, long time ago, a very great teacher said, "Man shall not live by bread alone." That is true. "A man who lives by bread alone and simply feeds his body will be nothing more than an animal. There is more than bread that goes to the making of a life. There are the things of the mind and the spirit, and we are all of us making a great mistake if we measure success in this world by material things. Material things are all right and ought to be emphasized to some extent, but they should not occupy more than their proper place in the scheme of things. Over and above and beyond them are the things of the intellect, and over and above those are the things of the spirit, the finer things of life. If, in reaching out for material prosperity, we forget those things, we may get the material prosperity, but we will not get true joy and true happiness out of life. I want to commend to every one that, in addition to striving for the good things of this life which are good in their way, to remember the other things also.

I promise you if you do that, it will not make any difference whether you get great rewards or not; it will not make any difference whether you arrive at high position or not. You will have instead a great inward satisfaction, and you will feel that you have lived a pretty good life and had a good time while you were doing it.

Have your good time as you go along. Don't be like the automobilists that go whizzing over the country at sixty miles an hour and arrive at their destinations at the end of the day's run not having seen the beauties of the country they went through; having seen nothing of the birds or the flowers, of the streams and the trees and the hills, but having just totaled up so many miles on such an expenditure of gas. Save on your gas and enjoy the scenery as you go along through life. Just put that into operation—save on your gas and see more of the scenery!

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale

Default having been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage containing a Power of Sale, by reason of which default said Power of Sale has become operative, and the Assignee of the Mortgagee hereinafter named is authorized to declare the whole sum due and he hereby does decalre said sum due, which mortgage was executed by Olaus Rodahl and Josie Rodahl, his wife, Mortgagors, to Deposit Trust & Savings Bank, Winona, Minn., a corporation under the laws of the State of Minnesota, Mortgagee, dated October 25, 1920 and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota on the 9th day of November 1920 at 8:30 o'clock A. M., in Book 92 of Mortgages, on page 322,

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Deposit Trust & Savings Bank, Winona, Minn., Mortgagee, to Jacob Kaldunski, by written assignment, dated August 10th, 1921 and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 7th day of February 1925, at 11 o'clock A. M., in Book 110 of Mortgages, on page 355;

And whereas, the said Jacob Kaldunski, the assignee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the Power of Sale therein contained; and whereas, there is actually due and claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of Three Thousands Dollars ($3000.00), with accumulated interest from the 25th day of October 1922 at the rate of six and one-half percent per annum, Less Eighty-seven and 88-100 Dollars ($87.88) paid on December 10th, 1923 for and on account of interest; and whereas the said Power of Sale has become operative and no action or proceedings having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof,

NOW THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz:

East Half Southwest Quarter (E½ SW¼), East Half Northwest Quarter (E½ NW¼), of Section number Thirty-five (35), in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North of Rrange Forty-two (42) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota.

Which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County at the Front door of the County Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 7th day of April 1925 at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the amount then due on said mortgage and all delinquent taxes, if any, paid on said described premises, together with the costs and disbursements of such sale and Seventy-five Dollars, attorneys fees stipulated in said Mortgage in cases of foreclosure.

Dated February 16th, 1925.
JACOB KALDUNSKI,
Assignee of Mortgagee.
W. J. Smith,
Attorney for Assignee of Mortgagee,
Morgan Block,
Winona, Minnesota.

Hardest Substance.

The hardest substance known is probably the diamond, and the next carborundum. The softest metal is mercury and the next potassium. Of the more common metals lead is probably the softest with gold next. Gold is probably the most malleable metal and silver next.

Water Bags of Indian Army.

The water is carried in goatskin [illegible] in the Indian army because the religion of the various soldiers interferes with the use of any other kind. The Mohammedans cannot drink from a bag made of pigskin, and the Hindus cannot drink from one of calfskin.

Death of Hilmer Folden

Hilmer Folden died last week Thursday in the government hospital at Fort Harrison, Montana, where he had been for about a year under the care of the hospital's physicians.

Mrs. T. B. Folden and daughter Jennie brot back the body of their son and brother on Monday, for burial in the Folden cemetery near the home where he was born on August 10th, 1900, and where he grew to young manhood. About five years ago he enlisted in the U. S. Navy and served nearly three years when he was retired from active service on account of sickness, contracted in the line of duty.

The funeral services were held at the Mission Church in Holt on Wednesday, Rev. Myhrer officiating.

The News extends the deepest sympathy to the grief-striken family in their hour of sorrow.

Holt Wins Over Roseau

The Holt men's team beat the Roseau basketball five at Holt, Saturday night by a score of 10 and 12.

The game was a humdinger from the start, as our visitors from the north were continually getting the Holt team in trouble. At the end of the half Roseau led, 10 and 6.

In the second half our boys tightened up their defence and stalled the Roseau team. Two timely field baskets made the score a 10 and 10 tie at the end of the last half.

One extra period was enough to break the tie, for two points were scored on free throws awarded the Holt team on fouls. A few moments later the game ended, Holt leading by two points.

Coach "Lars" Thune of the Thief River Falls high-school officiated as referee of the game.

Miss Anna Larson is the new clerk in Bennes' confectionery store.

Mrs. P. L. Anderson is able to be out again after a long siege with the flu.

A seven pound baby girl was born to Mr. and Mrs. O. M. Larson Wednesday morning.

Chris Rustad and family moved onto Dr. Brandendurg's farm the forepart of the week.

Mrs. Clarence Erickson returned home from Minneapolis Saturday somewhat improved in health.

Mrs. Allie Warner and children, of Radium, came Friday to visit her mother, Mrs. E. O. Risberg, and her sister, Mrs. Edna Hagglund.

Dr. O. L. Ohlin well known eye specialist will be at Holt hotel Wed. Apr. 1 & 2, and at Middle River 3-4, to examine eyes, fit & reset spectacles. Special attention to fitting children to bring their eyes up so after a time they will not need to wear glasses. If your eyes are troubling you have them examined by a qualified Specialist.

"TEN DOLLARS!"

SYNOPSIS.—Introducing "So Big" (Dirk DeJong) in his infancy. And his mother, Selina DeJong, daughter of Simeon Peake, gambler and gentleman of fortune. Her life, to young womanhood in Chicago in 1888, has been unconventional, somewhat seamy, but generally enjoyable. At school her chum is Julie Hempel, daughter of August Hempel, butcher. Simeon is killed in a quarrel that is not his own, and Selina, nineteen years old and practically destitute, secures a position as teacher at the High Prairie school, in the outskirts of Chicago, living at the home of a truck farmer, Klaas Pool. In Roelf, twelve years old, son of Klaas, Selina perceives a kindred spirit, a lover of beauty, like herself. Selina hears gossip concerning the affection of the "Widow Paarlenberg," rich and good-looking, for Pervus DeJong, poor truck farmer, who is insensible to the widow's attractions. For a community "sociable" Selina prepares a lunch box, dainty, but not of ample proportions, which is to be "auctioned," according to custom. The smallness of the box excites derision and Selina is heartbroken.

CHAPTER IV—Continued

Selina's cheeks matched her gown. Her eyes were wide and dark with the effort she was making to force back the hot haze threatening them. Why had she mounted this wretched soap box! Why had she come to this hideous party! Why had she come to High Prairie! Why! . . .

"Miss Selina Peake, that's who. Miss Se-li-na Peake!"

A hundred balloon faces pulled by a single cord turned toward her as she stood there on the box for all to see. They swam toward her. She put up a hand to push them back.

"What'm I bid! What'm I bid! What'm I bid for this here lovely little toothful, gents! Start her up!"

"Five cents!" piped up old Johannes Ambuul, with a snicker. The tittering crowd broke into a guffaw. Selina was conscious of a little sick feeling at the pit of her stomach. Through the haze she saw the widow's face, no longer milky, but smiling now. She saw Roelf's dear dark head. His face was set, like a man's. He was coming toward her, or trying to, but the crowd wedged him in, small as he was among those great bodies. She lost sight of him. How hot it was! how hot. . . . An arm at her waist. Someone had mounted the little box and stood teetering there beside her, pressed against her slightly, reassuringly. Pervus DeJong. Her head was on a level with the doorway, on the soap box, for all High Prairie to see.

"Five cents I'm bid for this lovely little mouthful put up by the schoolteacher's own fair hands. Five cents! Five—"

"One dollar!" Pervus DeJong.

The balloon faces were suddenly punctured with holes. High Prairie's jaw dropped with astonishment. Its mouth stood open.

There was nothing plain about Selina now. Her dark head was held high, and his fair one beside it made a vivid foil. The purchase of the wine-colored cashmere was at last justified.

"And ten!" cackled old Johannes Ambuul, his rheumy eyes on Selina.

Art and human spitefulness struggled visibly for mastery in Adam Ooms' face—and art won. The auctioneer triumphed over the man. The term "crowd psychology" was unknown to him, but he was artist enough to sense that some curious magic process, working through this roomful of people, had transformed the little white box, from a thing despised and ridiculed, into an object of beauty, of value, of infinite desirability. He now eyed it in a catalepsy of admiration.

"One-ten I'm bid for this box all tied with a ribbon to match the gown of the girl who brought it. Gents, you get the ribbon, the lunch, and the girl. And only one-ten bid for all that. Gents! Gents! Remember, it ain't only a lunch—it's a picture. It pleases the eye. Do I hear one—"

"Five bits!" Barend DeRoo, of Low Prairie, in the lists. A strapping young Dutchman, the Brom Bones of the district. He drove to the Haymarket with his load of produce and played cards all night on the wagon under the gas torches while the street girls of the neighborhood assailed him in vain. Six feet three, his red face shone now like a harvest moon above the crowd. A merry, mischievous eye that laughed at Pervus DeJong and his dollar bid.

"Dollar and a half!" A high clear voice—a boy's voice. Roelf.

"Oh, no!" said Selina aloud. But she was unheard in the gabble. Roelf had once confided to her that he had saved three dollars and fifty cents in the last three years. Five dollars would purchase a set of tools that his mind had been fixed on for months past. Selina saw Klaas Pool's look of astonishment changing to anger. Saw Maartje Pool's quick hand on his arm, restraining him.

"Two dollars!" Pervus DeJong.

"And ten." Johannes Ambuul's cautious bid.

"Two and a quarter." Barend DeRoo.

"Two-fifty!" Pervus DeJong.

"Three dollars!" The high voice of the boy. It cracked a little on the last syllable, and the crowd laughed.
